Public Aroused

President Roosevelt yesterday confirmed reports that the question of wartime wage control as a counterinflation measure was receiving Administration study.

Witholding details, the President said only that imposition of ceilings on the pay of American workers was under consideration and that the Canadian system of wage controls, among others, was being surveyed.

At the Capitol, meanwhile, a flood of mail demanding full-time war production and cessation of work stoppages resulted in broader legislative proposals and an overall Senate inquiry.

Developments:

Senator Elmer Thomas (Democrat), of Oklahoma, chairman of the Senate Appropriations Subcommittee on War Appropriations, dispatched calls to heads of Government defense and labor agencies and labor organizations to testify before his group on the whole question of wages, overtime, strikes and the length of the work week.

Senator Brown (Democrat), of Michigan, coauthor of the price-control law, suggested that the Administration has broad power to act under the price law's direction to Government agencies "to work toward a stabilization of prices, fair and equitable wages and cost of production."

40-Hour Ban Gains

A movement gained headway in the House to force Judiciary Committee hearings on a bill to suspend the 40-hour week, and the Senate Labor Committee awaited a report from Secretary of Labor Perkins on a similar bill. The re-

G. M. Umpire Grants Double Holiday Pay

Detroit, March 13 (AP).—The contention of the United Automobile Workers (CIO) that double time should be paid to auto workers employed Sundays and holidays on swing shifts in General Motors Corporation plants engaged in war production was upheld in a decision announced tonight by G. Allen Dash, jr., permanent umpire for General Motors and the union.

The controversy, which has waged for several months, was referred to the umpire after the War Labor Board had refused to rule on it. Dash assumed jurisdiction about two weeks ago.

Dash pointed out, in his ruling, that he was "granted no latitude to consider the equities of the situation" nor has he any right to modify or reinterpret provisions of the agreement "in the light of changed circumstances."

He ruled, in effect, that the contract called for payment of double time for Sunday and holiday work unless that work was specifically excepted from the provision "from the technical nature of the process involved."

The ruling, which the company previously had agreed to accept, means that the double-time provision will apply until the termination of the agreement April 28 and the extra remuneration to the men on swing shifts will be retroactive to the beginning of the swing shifts. In some General Motors plants this started early in January.

Dash's ruling added that if enforcement of this provision "should prove to be an obstacle to full war production, the umpire urges both parties to act on their avowed intention toward maximizing production by reformulating such provisions as soon as possible."

The Information Myth

THE President, being a good-natured, broad-shouldered boss, took all responsibility for the erection of Mr. Lowell Mellett's $600,000* boondoggle information center at his Friday's press conference.

Mr. Roosevelt commented on the plight of the businessman coming to Washington and the necessity of additional housing information, and concluded with the observation that if it were found that the Office of Government Reports does not need this building there are at least ten war agencies that do need the space.

Mr. Roosevelt is a very busy man. His every waking minute is filled with problems much more pressing than this one. He does not have the time to go to the bottom of every matter he is asked to approve. If Mr. Mellett had presented the real facts the problem would have evaporated into thin air.

THE real facts are these:

The War Production Board is doing a marvelous job for the businessman.

He does not have to come to Washington unless sent for.

The WPB contract distribution service has opened field offices in 119 cities covering every State in the Union.

These branches have been expanded and consolidated with priority field offices. They are manned by well-trained men to whom a businessman can go with such problems as how to obtain priorities, procedures to follow, what forms to fill out, how to get contracts, how to get financing, how to meet labor requirements, or how to straighten out any of the hitches that necessarily arise in the complicated and enormous war effort.

Only in exceptional cases—a big business or production problem involving the different interests of several Government agencies—is it necessary for the businessman to come here. In these cases he is usually called by the WPB for a prearranged conference, and, of course, knows precisely where he is going and what for.

The picture of the sorely beset businessman wandering around Washington trying to find out where to peddle his wares is hooey. He is kidding only Mr. Lowell Mellett and, in all probability, his wife.

For the benefit of Mr. Mellett, The Post is printing a complete list of the information offices of the War Production Board by cities and States, and the name of each office manager, on Page 2 of this issue.

THE President indicated he felt Mr. Mellett's new boondoggle would be able to furnish a real center for housing information. It is obvious Mr. Roosevelt has not had time to ride down Pennsylvania Avenue recently.

Right smack in the center of the triangle on Post Square, directly across from the rising boondoggle, is a brand-new housing information building. It has a nice new sign and is open to the public early and late. For the benefit of anyone who may be interested, The Post is printing a picture of this building on Page 2.

This leaves Mr. Mellett with the not exclusive right to give information about the Japanese cherry blossoms.

The only purpose The Post has in following the course of Mr. Mellett's $600,000 boondoggle is to call attention to the fact that winning a war is not just another WPA project.

The Great Boondoggle

Congress' Plan to Give Building To War Agency Gains Support

President Assumes All Responsibility for Information Center Idea

Effort Also Continued To Take PBA Funds Away From Mellett

By Charles Mercer
Post Staff Writer

A spreading determination in Congress to shear the Nation's war program of frills was reflected yesterday in strengthened support for a plan to turn over the $600,000 Office of Government Reports information center, now being built, to an "essential" war agency if its construction is not stopped.

The effort on Capitol Hill to take Public Buildings Administration funds away from OGR by means of a joint resolution and thus to end work on the building at Fourteenth Street and Pennsylvania Avenue Northwest continued to receive the strong backing of Democrats and Republicans in both Houses.

Lowell Mellett, OGR director, who yesterday admitted to the House Public Buildings and Grounds Committee that he would abide by Congressional decision on the fate of his office's growing palatial public information center, will appear before the committee again Monday.

Decision Is Expected Then

Chairman Lanham (Democrat), of Texas, last night said he hoped the committee would come to a decision at that time on the joint resolution, which was introduced last week by Representative Satterfield (Democrat), of Virginia.

Senator Byrd (Democrat), of Virginia, chairman of the Joint Committee on Nondefense Expenditures, praised the Satterfield resolution, expressing the hope it would be passed. In the meantime, he said, he was continuing work on a projected resolution that would convert the OGR building, slated for the use of businessmen coming to Washington in search of Government information, into a structure to be used "by some essential agency in the war effort."

Several members of the House committee, before whom Mellett testified yesterday, expressed approval of such a plan in the event the building could not be stopped. This move also was advocated by

President Roosevelt yesterday assumed full responsibility for originating the idea of the $800,000 Office of Government Reports information center now being built at Fourteenth Street and Pennsylvania Avenue, and defended it on the grounds that it would aid:

1. Thousands of new Government workers coming to Washington and vainly pounding the pavements in search of lodging.

2. Thousands of businessmen marching from one agency to another for information on war work.

3. The offices of Senators and Representatives seeking information from the Government for their constituents.

Raises Question Himself

The President, taking cognizance of newspaper and Congressional criticism of the project and of OGR Director Lowell Mellett, raised the subject himself at his press conference.

He declared that if there were an information center for the people coming in here to take jobs and that if they were thus relieved of having to pound the pavements he supposed that the saving on shoe leather alone would pay for the cost of the building.

In other words, he said, the building is a financially sound enterprise.

In calculating this, he explained, it would be fair to include the time wasted by Government officials who have people running in reporting that they have no place to sleep that night.

Knows of Such Cases

This experience, he added, comes right down to the President of the United States and to other high Government officials. He said he was personally aware of two or three cases where at 11 o'clock at night there was no place for the new Government employes to sleep.

Having a central information place for these people to go to will be the decent and right thing to do, the Chief Executive asserted.

Asked by a reporter if there were not already such a center in the

Shorn Farm Bill Passed By House

Measure Expected To Save Twice Its Direct Slashes of 48 Million Dollars

Hitherto sacrosanct agriculture appropriations yesterday yielded to demands from back home for immediate retrenchment as the House passed a farm bill badly dented by deep economy cuts.

Direct savings in appropriations and loan authorizations totaled 48 million dollars, but a wide range of limitations on farm policies was estimated to double that figure in potential economics.

Cleared after nine stormy days of debate, the bill carried 648 million dollars in appropriations and another 105 million dollars in loan authorizations for New Deal farm agencies. Farm appropriations alone in the current fiscal year totaled $1,127,623,854.

Before the House passed the bill, without so much as a roll call vote, Representative Dirksen (Republican), of Illinois, with the support of Chairman Cannon, of the Appropriations Committee, slashed in half the $50,319,557 for the rural rehabilitation program. Dirksen's amendment was adopted 142 to 119.

Some of the Cuts

The bill, which had already undergone economy pruning in the preceding eight days, yesterday bowed to these additional amendments:

An eight-million-dollar limitation on Agriculture Department allowances for travel and hotel expenses, representing a 50 per cent cut in funds provided for that purpose.

A $1000 limitation on rehabilitation loans to any one farmer, compared with the existing $2500 ceiling.

Elimination of authority for operation and construction of migratory labor camps.

Under Parity Sales Banned

Previously the farm tenancy program was hit by lopping 20 million dollars from the 45-million tenant loan authorization and halving the $2,500,264 for administration of the act. Among other earlier economies, a $1000 ceiling was placed on soil conservation benefits to any one farmer, estimated in itself to save 50 million dollars.

But the farm bloc turned back

Coordinator Of Shooting Hits at OCD

By Christine Sadler
Post Staff Writer

If the President and Congress want a physical fitness program such as now operates under the Office of Civilian Defense, C. B. Lister, secretary for the National Rifle Association, wants to continue his job as coordinator of shooting—but personally he thinks the plan a little cockeyed.

"I do not believe in the Government controlling recreation, but if that is the plan approved I'll try to hang on to the potrfolio I have. If anybody's going to coordinate rifle shooting in civilian defense I think we should do it," he said last night.

Secretary Lister said he had written to Senator Byrd (Democrat), of Virginia, chairman of the Joint Committee on Nonessential Federal Expenditures, explaining how the rifle association became involved with OCD. He will get the letter in time to "use it on the floor Monday if he wishes," Lister said, and it will contradict the idea that he has been in any quarrel with John B. Kelly, the physical fitness director.

"All our relationships have been of the friendliest sort. We tried to get the War Department and Selective Service interested in some plan to utilize us as part of the war effort as soon as our National Guards were federalized. We got nowhere. Then we received a letter

Two Women Killed in Blackout

Two women touring the city to inspect the blackout were killed last night in a two-car crash that injured four other persons. The deaths pushed the District's traffic toll for the year to 28.

Mrs. Emma Newman, 26, of 1024 Massachusetts Avenue Northeast, died en route to the hospital, and Mrs. John Malloy, 45, same address, was killed instantly after a collision about 10:30 p. m. at Benning Road and Oklahoma Avenue Northeast.

Earlier in the day John H. McLean, 26, of 1408 Forty-fourth Street Northeast, was killed when his car skidded off the road near Seat Pleasant, Md.

Russians Report 84 Towns, Villages Retaken Between Capital, Leningrad

By Eddy Gilmore
Associated Press Staff Writer

Moscow (Saturday), March 14.—A special Russian announcement today listed 14,000 Germans killed on the northwestern front in 15 days, making a grand total of 63,700 Nazis officially reported slain between Leningrad and Moscow within a month.

Today's announcement said the latest recorded toll was inflicted on Hitler's invaders between February 22 and March 10 on the northwestern front below Leningrad. In this area the Red army liberated 84 towns and villages, the Russians announced.

It followed by two days another special communique telling of the killing of 49,700 Germans on the Kalinin front, stretching north of the Smolensk area toward Lake Ilmen, from February 8 to March 5.

Much Booty Taken

Great quantities of booty fell into the hands of the victorious Soviet forces, and 91 German planes—including 60 big three-engined transports used by Hitler in a vain effort to reinforce his trapped Sixteenth army at Staraya Russa—were declared destroyed.

[The northwestern front embraces the Staraya Russa area, and dips south into the Kalinin region, where the Red army has been waging one of the most determined battles of its winter offensive.

[Earlier reports, according to the United Press, said an entire German division was "completely wiped out" in the Murmansk sector, 1120 enemy troops killed in the destruction of 23 strongholds below Leningrad, and 2000 more on the Kalinin front.]

"Our troops continued offensive operations against determined German opposition Friday and continued to advance," the Friday night communique said. "The enemy attempted to counterattack in several sectors but was repulsed with heavy losses. On Thursday we destroyed 24 enemy planes and our losses

Mall Project Confirmed By Roosevelt

By Gerald G. Gross
Post Staff Writer

Confirming the exclusive story in The Post which had come out a few hours earlier, President Roosevelt disclosed yesterday that he is quite serious about building warworkers' dormitories in the Mall.

He said he will confer in a day or two with John B. Blandford, national housing administrator. Realizing that at least two of his own agencies—the National Capital Park and Planning Commission and the Fine Arts Commission—will never approve the scheme, the President yet is of the opinion that the vast Mall area should be utilized to relieve housing congestion.

It is virtually certain that the issue will be taken up by the planning body at its monthly meeting next Thursday. The chairman is Frederic A. Delano, uncle of the President.

It can be said authoritatively that Delano is opposed to the idea of conversion.

Rather, he believes that housing for Government workers should be erected in less monumental quarters than the Mall.

But the President told his press conference yesterday that unless a more suitable site can be found, the Mall dormitories will go up.

He said the housing situation has become so serious in recent months

Gneisenau Again Attacked

R. A. F. Pounds French Areas, Kiel in Continuing Offensive

By the Associated Press

London, March 13.—Squadron after squadron of the Royal Air Force swarmed over northern France from the Belgian border to Paris today in the biggest daylight raids yet of the new spring offensive and at least eight German fighters were knocked down in one clash alone.

The round-the-clock assault continued without letup tonight, and the coast from Boulogne to Ostend was alight with exploding bombs and antiaircraft gun flashes. Clusters of searchlight batteries fingered the sky above Cap Gris Nez.

The British announced the loss of five of their own fighters which swept to the attack "in force" following a fiery overnight assault upon the 26,000-ton Nazi battleship Gneisenau at Kiel. No British bombers were lost today.

The biggest scrap of the day occurred over Hazebrouck, about midway between Armentieres and St. Omer, where the railroad yard of this industrial center was the target of R. A. F. bombers.

The R. A. F.'s ace squadron leader, Paddy Finucane, just out of the hospital with wound stripes, led the attack, bagging two German planes for a war total of 26.

Other bombers and fighters made daylight assaults upon the Boulogne and Calais coastal areas and reconnaissance planes scouted the Paris industrial region.

The size of the British attacks and the increasing Nazi opposition they are encountering was indicated by today's R. A. F. losses, which brought to 13 the number of planes failing to return from the day and night attacks.

Bombs loosed by the night raiders started destructive fires among installations of the Kiel naval base where the already battered Gneisenau lay in drydock, the air ministry announced. Other British formations blasted additional areas of northwest Germany and strewed mines in Nazi waters.

Without a pause squadron after squadron of R. A. F. craft swept over the Channel today and heavily attacked the Calais and Boulogne

Viereck Gets 2 to 6 Years, Is Fined $1500

Nazi Agent Seeks Bail Upon Appeal; Jap Pleads Guilty

By Dillard Stokes
Post Staff Writer

George Sylvester Viereck yesterday got the limit—two to six years in the penitentiary—for violating the Foreign Agents Act in his propaganda operations for Adolf Hitler.

Justice F. Dickinson Letts, before whom the German agent was convicted in the District Court, also fined him $1500 and ordered him to pay the costs of his 12-day trial—probably about $2000.

Several score persons waited the rest of the afternoon to see Viereck leave the court handcuffed to a deputy marshal, on his way back to the District Jail, where he was locked up as soon as he was found guilty last Thursday night.

Bail Asked on Appeal

Within an hour after Viereck was sentenced his counsel asked the United States Court of Appeals here to review the conviction and moyed for his release on bail for the several months the review would take. Special Prosecutor William Power Maloney has until next Thursday to answer the bail application.

Meanwhile, Tsutomu Obana, 30-year-old secretary of the Japanese Chamber of Commerce in San Francisco, pleaded guilty to four counts of an indictment charging him with four false registrations as an agent of the Tokyo government. Obana worked for a propaganda committee set up by four prominent Japanese, who left him to take the rap when they returned to Japan long before the war.

The 57-year-old Viereck worked with industry and wide effect spreading the Kaiser's propaganda

Norwegian Ship Is Sunk Off Delaware

U. S. Merchantmen Torpedoed in Caribbean Or Off Coast Now 33

By the Associated Press

The Navy Department in Washington announced last night the torpedoing of "a small Norwegian merchant ship" off the Atlantic Coast, bringing to 33 the number of vessels officially announced as attacked off United States shores.

In Philadelphia, the Fourth Naval District office said that 14 survivors from the Norwegian vessel had arrived at Fenwich Island beach, near Lewes, Del., last Wednesday morning and had said their vessel was torpedoed and sunk Tuesday night.

Capt. Arthur Dahl was killed in the attack, a Navy spokesman said, but his body later was recovered by a fisherman. Five crew members were unaccounted for.

Also announced by the Navy in Washington was the torpedoing of "a small United States merchant ship" in the Caribbean area. Earlier, from Havana, came an announcement that the United States merchant vessel Texan, a 7005-ton freighter owned by the American Hawaiian Steamship Co. had been torpedoed and sunk off Nuevitas, North Cuba, and that nine of her crew of 47 were unaccounted for.

It was not known whether the Navy announcement referred to the Texan.

At Santiago, Cuba, it was announced that a lifeboat bearing the name Olga had drifted ashore at a nearby port. A 2496-ton collier by that name is listed as the property of the Carter Coal Transportation Co., of Fall River, Mass.

Further reports of enemy violence in the Caribbean came from Castries, St. Lucia Island, where, it was

Advice for All

Roosevelt Condemns 'Politics' In a U. S. Fighting for Life

President Roosevelt yesterday advised his press conference that all should realize that America is at war, and adjourn politics.

Too many people, the President said, are thinking in terms of the past and are not aware that the United States is engaged in a struggle for its very existence. It is time to wake up, decidedly time, he said.

His remarks applied to several of the correspondents, he said in a direct shot at the press. And they are true, likewise, of Congress, he continued.

But the President defended his Cabinet against any implication that its members might be involved in political maneuvers coincidental to the war effort. Without specific reference to the recent militant address of Attorney General Francis Biddle calling for maintenance of the labor and liberal objectives of the New Deal program, the President said that he found little or no politics manifested in Cabinet actions.

Politics in the Cabinet is quite rare, he said. But he added that when he does find any evidence of political action, he jumps on it with both feet to stamp it out.

A reporter inquired whether recent conferences of Postmaster General Frank C. Walker with Pennsylvania political leaders were arranged with his knowledge and consent. The President replied that any such conferences were a Pennsylvania matter adding that any implication that Walker was acting for him would represent politics on the part of a correspondent who wrote such a dispatch.

He drew from his questioner word that Walker's home is in Scranton, Pa.

Melbourne (Saturday), March 14.—Apparent loss of the Australian cruiser Perth and the sloop Yarra with their 833 men in the withdrawal from Java was announced by Prime Minister John Curtin today as the Japanese pushed new naval forces into the Solomon Islands northeast of this continent.

Curtin said the ships had fought successfully and without damage in the battles of the Java Sea but had not been heard from since they left a Java port for home. Their fate is not known, but they are presumed to have been sunk.

Naval sources said possibly some of the 682 men of the Perth and the 151 of the Yarra had reached land.

Loss of the two ships would bring Australian losses since the outbreak of the war to two cruisers, two sloops and one destroyer.

Foe Claimed 23 Ships

(The Japanese claimed on March 3 that they had sunk 23 United Nations warships of Java on the weekend of March 1, including the Perth and her sister ship, the Hobart.)

The 6980-ton Perth was damaged by German bombs last summer when she participated in the British evacuation of Crete. She was built in England in 1934.

The Yarra, of 1060 tons, was hailed by all Australia last October when she and a merchant cruiser captured seven Axis ships in the Persian Gulf.

The Japanese push into the Solomon Islands, in the Melanesian group which shelters Australia and New Zealand on the east and north, followed battering of Japanese positions on New Guinea and New Britain by American and Australian bombers.

Apparently it was aimed at guarding the right flank of any Japanese venture against east Australia; increasing the danger to supply lines from the United States, and threatening the stepping-stone

A. A. Shells Fired In Error Bring War to Wall Street

By the Associated Press

New York, March 13.—A random shot from an antiaircraft battery, whose gunners accidentally let go with eight shells, today chipped a piece off one of New York's financial towers with a crash that brought the war to Wall Street.

The "direct hit," which sent dozens of police cars and fire trucks into action and caused at least one air raid warden to prepare to lead some 200 workers to shelter, knocked pieces of brick from a ledge between the thirty-seventh and thirty-eighth floors of the 40-story Equitable Building at 120 Broadway. Brick dust and fragments of steel fell to the street.

Fragments showered on window ledges of the Bankers Club, on the thirty-eighth floor, and flew into open windows on the lower floors, but no one was reported injured and no windows were shattered. Luckily no one was struck by the 2-inch sections of steel which detectives discovered on the pavement.

The shells were reported to have traveled about 2000 yards.

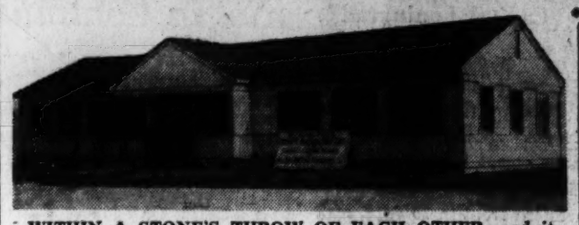
Two Information Centers—'Side by Each'



WITHIN A STONE'S THROW OF EACH OTHER, and it wouldn't take Bob Feller to do the throwing, are the Defense Housing Registry (lower) and the site of the OGR information center (top). The former is in the square on the east side of Fourteenth Street, between Pennsylvania Avenue and E Street, and the latter is in the square on the west side

Roosevelt Tells Information Need

Defense Housing Registry located almost across the street, in Post Square, from the new OGR building, the President declared that no one knew where it was located.

To reporters' questions as to who was responsible for the genesis of the building, Mr. Roosevelt replied that he thought it was obvious that the brain child was his.

"The Washington Post hasn't admitted it," a newsman said.

The President promptly indicated that he preferred the fact to be recognized that the information center was his idea. His shoulders are sufficiently broad to take the responsibility, he implied.

Turning to the function the center would perform for business, the President noted that he had received hundreds of letters of complaint from business men that they had been unable to obtain information.

To help these people, he said, would save the cost of the building ten times over.

He cited the example of a man who came to see him two weeks ago who made tiles used by the Navy and 10 or 15 other Government departments.

At the end of a week he came to the White House with collar wilted and shoe leather worn and reported that for a week he had been given the run-around. This was not actually the case, Mr. Roosevelt explained, but in fact the man had been forced to go to 15 or 20 different departments to find out if they needed tiles.

The idea is to have men like that one, the President asserted, go to a central place and see somebody at the desk and tell that person that he wished to sell his tiles.

The man at the front desk would instruct the visitor to go to a given office. He would give the inquirer a card and the man would set off to the right office.

In this way the businessman would not be given a run-around but instead would be given some person who would clean up his affairs in 24 hours.

That individual gets service, Mr. Roosevelt added. In a private organization they would do it that way and there is no reason why the Government should not do it.

The President pointed out that there had been much talk and agitation about little business and questions on why the Government hasn't done anything about the little business group. The information center, he inferred, was one answer.

The third justification cited by the Chief Executive was the situation arising when the secretaries of members of Congress were confronted by constituents' requests for information. This being a war period, he explained, most of the questions were new to the Congressional staffs, who would meet them by referring the questions to a central information office.

Thus, instead of sending a constituent to half a dozen different offices, he is told where to go and who is the right man to straighten him out in 24 hours.

The center is justified by the letters of complaint on the existing problems and the personal sense of: I don't know where to go, Mr. Roosevelt said.

He declared that the building is being constructed in good faith as an information center, but that if it does not work out and is proved not to be necessary, the space will be given to one of at least 10 different Government war agencies now clamoring for additional office room.

OGR 'Frills' Face Shearing by Congress

Won't Halt Construction

Representative Satterfield, who appeared before the House committee yesterday with Mellett, asked the OGR director if he would be willing to order cessation of work on the building "until the will of Congress has been ascertained."

"I don't think that would be efficient," Mellett replied. "In these times I think it's wiser to continue building. Then, if we do not receive the building, some other agency could move in."

Representative Hebert (Democrat), of Louisiana, asked Mellett who prepared the letter, dated February 2, which the President signed and which ordered him to go ahead with the information center for the use of business men seeking various Federal offices and officials.

"Why, I assume . . ." Mellett shrugged, as if signifying the President himself must have written it.

Hebert—"Did you?"

Mellett—"I did not. If it would not be violating the confidence of the President, I could recite long conversations I've had with him on the subject."

Denies Flouting Congress

Hebert—"I want to know, did you go ahead with this building without the permission of Congress?"

Mellett—"I did not."

Hebert—"Supposing Congress told you this building couldn't go up?"

Mellett—"It depends on how Congress told me."

Hebert—"Oh, then, you would take advantage of a technicality?"

Mellett—"No, that's not true."

Hebert—"Was there any intimation in your mind when the building was started that Congress was against it?"

Mellett—"There certainly was not. I have no desire to flout the will of Congress. We're merely trying to help the President in everything we can."

Third Revision of Cost

In his testimony Mellett issued a third revised figure on the cost of equipping the information center, placing it at $112,000. Before the joint committee on Thursday he testified the cost would be $62,535. Last week it was set at $285,000.

Chairman Lanham, addressing Mellett, declared:

"As I understand it, the primary purpose of this information center is to give business men a chance to know with whom they should get in contact. I assume that business men coming here would at least know with what departments they should get in touch, and if they went there they could find whom they want to see.

"Business men coming here have a practice of getting in touch with members of Congress. Isn't it a normal function of members to help them find that information?"

Representative Hebert seconded his statement, adding, "One thing we are paid for is to give them that service."

Cites Circular Letter

He introduced in the record a circular letter sent members of Congress October 24 of last year by Clyde Garrett, chief of the Service and Information Office of the Commerce Department, offering to help business men coming to the office find the answers to such questions as:

"What procedure should I follow to secure a contract in the defense program?"

"How can I sell my product to the Government?"

"How do I go about securing either a primary or a subcontract?"

Hebert affirmed that the OGR in its information center would only be duplicating the work of the Department of Commerce office.

Garrett Doesn't Know It

(Later in the day Garrett told The Post he had not been informed of any plan to combine the offices.)

This alleged similarity of functions "is just another effort to make more jobs for more people and just a continuation of the old policy of overlapping," said Representative Wilson (Republican), of Indiana.

In defense of Mellett's office Representative Manasco (Democrat), of Alabama, declared the OGR had always rendered him valuable service when he sought information from it.

In a crack at the Office of Civilian Defense Representative Bell (Democrat), of Missouri, declared, "Perhaps this information center is needed by coordinators of recreation."

"Then we'll have coordinators coordinating the coordinators," added Representative Satterfield.

Mellett outlined for the committee the duties of the three divisions of the OGR. They include field operations in the various States, press intelligence and the United States Information Service. He cited as one of the chief contributions of the press intelligence division the huge clipping bureau which he said is coordinating the activities of all Federal clipping bureaus.

Can Get Information Afield

"In view of the numerous State offices, why couldn't persons coming to Washington get their information in those States," Chairman Lanham asked.

"To a considerable extent that's being done," replied Mellett.

Lanham said he had read in a newspaper that Postmaster General Walker suggested the idea to the President and asked Mellett how that was his function.

"I received a call from the Postmaster General saying the idea had been discussed at a Cabinet meeting," replied Mellett, "and he said, 'I'm suggesting that your office should be able to be expanded and take care of the matter.' That's the first I heard of it."

Asked where he expected to get the personnel for the center, Mellett said workers would be obtained "from various branches of the Government."

In urging the committee to accept his joint resolution, Representative Satterfield declared:

"The director of this office (Mellett) and the Chief Executive must know that there is serious opposition not alone in the Congress but on the part of citizens in every State to the spending of this money for such a purpose.

An Intentional By-Pass

"To continue building in the face of this opposition without pausing long enough to ascertain the will of the Congress constitutes an intention to by-pass and circumvent the appropriating power which is vested only in Congress.

"I do not believe that the fact that after the Congress delegates to the Executive the right to spend money it relieves the legislative arm of the Government of its responsibility to see that those funds are wisely and properly expended. Nor does the delegation to spend preclude the Congress from upsetting whatever has been done if in its judgment there is wasteful dissipation of funds.

"Manifestly such delegation is not irrevocable and the duty of the Congress to conserve is a continuing one.

"The people of the country are clearly ahead of the Congress and the Administration. They are so far ahead that this adventure brings only censure and derision. The people will have no part with us if for any reason we fail to register our disapproval of this excursion in no uncertain terms.

First Layer of Cake

"This is the first layer on the cake, this temporary building. There will be others unless we halt it here and now.

"Who knows? The tank or the ship or the plane, the lack of which the President has so wisely warned us against which may mean the difference between victory or defeat may be bound up in this and other expenditures sure to follow.

"If we could get just one glimpse of bureaucracy in retreat, not necessarily routed, but just gracefully and wisely stepping back a foot or two, I think our people would be greatly encouraged.

"Here is a chance to compel it."

Coordinator Hits At OCD Plans

from the Hale America people. We were glad to be noticed.

"The difference is one of opinion and philosophy. I just don't see the need for Governmental regimentation," he declared.

Senator Byrd placed in the Congressional Record yesterday the complete list of national coordinators for various sports. Bernarr McFadden, health apostle, is coordinator for both hiking and walking. Codeball—which the sports experts around Washington fail to recognize—is coordinated by William E. Code, of Chicago, or apparently by the man who invented it.

Another chuckle on the list is the coordinator of lacrosse, one of the toughest sports in the books. She is Louise Burbeck, of Miss Beard's School, Orange, N. J. Yachting is coordinated by William H. Taylor, while Col. Charles J. Deiges is coordinator for tug-of-war.

Assailed as Commercialism

Senator Byrd said last night the list of coordinators convinces him the physical fitness division is "commercialism from top to bottom."

While the Congress-OCD tug was in progress yesterday the latter issued a press release instructing the public on what to do when discovering an unexploded or delayed-action bomb on the premises. Don't touch or handle is the gist of the suggestion.

The War Department has accepted full responsibility for disposing of all "unexploded or delayed-action bombs," according to the release. The Office of Civilian Defense is responsible, however, for the disposal of "incendiary bombs and extinguishing of fires." Also, the OCD is responsible for recognition, location and report upon unexploded bombs for disposal by military personnel—and for immediate application of safety precautions at site of the unexploded bombs.

Warning signs should be placed near bombs or shells and approaches barricaded. Occupied buildings within 500 feet should be evacuated. Persons should be warned to keep away from walls and to open doors and windows of buildings within a danger zone, the instructions said. Training material for key civilian personnel is being prepared jointly by the War Department and OCD and will be issued soon, it was declared.

Codeball Is Played By 50,000—Well, Well

Chicago, March 13 (INS).—Codeball, the game that is a mystery to Senator Byrd and some Washingtonians, is played by about 50,000 persons, its inventor said tonight, and further it is played at Warm Springs, Ga., where he laid out a course in 1937.

Dr. William Edward Code, Chicago physician and one of the 61 OCD sports coordinators, presented the game to the public in 1929.

There are two versions—on court and on green. An inflated ball about the size of a cantaloupe is used. The on court game is played in a handball court under much the same rules except that the feet are used to strike the ball. The on green game is similar to golf, except that the ball is kicked instead of struck with a club, into an inverted cone-shaped bowl and 14 holes constitute a course.

Codeball is the only A. A. U. sanctioned sport which bears the name of its inventor.

7 Parisians Executed

Vichy, March 13 (AP).—German authorities in Paris announced tonight that seven Frenchmen had been executed there for repeated "acts of violence" against the Germans.

The announcement signed by the Nazi "commander of Greater Paris" listed the names of seven Parisians who were said to have been condemned because of guerilla warfare against the occupation forces.

All Buildings At Two Bases Are Smashed

American Flying Fortresses have struck again at Japanese forces threatening an invasion of Australia, smashing two enemy airdromes in New Guinea and shooting down five Jap planes.

The attacks, which occurred on Wednesday, were directed at the Jap-held air bases at Salamaua and Lae on New Guinea's northeast coast. All buildings at the two airdromes were destroyed and their runways were cratered by bombs, the War Department said.

One of the five heavy bombers making the assault on Lae flew over the harbor—probable jumping-off spot for an invasion of Australia—and scored a direct hit on a pier.

Attacked by Fighters

Continuing the story of the raid, the War Department said that the five "flying forts" were attacked by a formation of Japanese fighting planes. During the ensuing scrap, five of the enemy fighters were destroyed, while all of the American bombers returned to their base intact.

The raids apparently were part of the continuing attacks on Japanese-held bases north of Australia which United Nations' headquarters have reported.

Meanwhile, in the Philippines, the large Japanese army was apparently awaiting further reinforcements before again attacking Gen. Douglas MacArthur's outnumbered stalwarts. The War Department reported that there had been no action during the day.

Text of Communique

The text of War Department communique No. 145, telling of the aerial fighting, follows:

"1. Philippine Theater: The situation in Bataan is unchanged.

2. New Guinea: Five American Army heavy bombers of the Flying Fortress type raided the Japanese-held airdromes at Salamaua and Lae in New Guinea on March 11. All buildings were destroyed and heavy damage was inflicted on runways. At the harbor of Lae a direct hit was made on a pier. Our bombers were attacked by a formation of Japanese fighting planes. Five enemy plans were shot down. None of our bombers was damaged.

President Favors Mall Dormitories

that he knows of four or five Government executives who have lent money out of their own pockets to low-salaried employes who were unable to find living accommodations within their means.

Saying that the Mall Jormitory story by Ernest Lindley, which appeared in yesterday's Post, expressed his views accurately, the President went on to explain that he would like to see a beginning on barracks-like living quarters having central hallways with small individual bedrooms on either side.

He made it clear that he is not insistent the temporary wartime structures go in the Mall. To the contrary, if a location comparably convenient and available is turned up the dormitories might just as well be built there, the President indicated.

A few weeks ago Representative Everett M. Dirksen, of Illinois, ranking Republican on the House District Committee, advocated utilization of the Mall as a parking lot. He hinted, at the time, that he might introduce a bill to effect this change but none has been forthcoming.

Although the planning and arts commission would object to any transformation of the Mall, they are powerless to do anything about it. The wartime office buildings south of the Reflection Pool and in the Monument Grounds itself were started over the commissions' protest.

The agency headed by Delano which theoretically is charged with the duty of systematizing and coordinating Government building expansion in Washington and vicinity was not even informed of plans to build the Office of Government Reports at Fourteenth Street and Pennsylvania Avenue.

It would be no surprise if the National Capital Park and Planning Commission next week proposes, as an alternative to building dwelling units in the Mall, utilization of the East Potomac Park tourist camp and the square immediately south of the new Interior Building for low-rent housing.

The latter site originally was to be occupied by an annex to the Pan American Building. When Interior Secretary Harold L. Ickes objected that such a structure would block the view of his Interior Building from Constitution Avenue, the project was indefinitely postponed.

Japs Have 340,000 Troops Available to Attack Australia

By Ralph B. Jordan
International News Service Staff Writer

With the United Nations Forces in Australia, March 13.—The Japanese have available approximately 340,000 combat troops in 17 divisions for an invasion of Australia, "informed sources" in the island continent estimated today.

These sources say that Japanese fighting strength is spread out in this manner:

Five divisions on garrison duty in Japan.

Ten divisions in Manchukuo.

Fifteen divisions in China.

Five divisions in the Philippines, three of them battling with no success against the heroic forces of Gen. Douglas MacArthur.

Three divisions in Formosa.

Four divisions in the Japanese mandated islands.

Eight divisions in Java, Sumatra, Celebes.

Two divisions in New Guinea.

Have 81 Altogether

This makes a total of 64 divisions, and four more believed en route south, bring the total to 68 out of a presently equipped grand total of 81, leaving 13 available for transportation wherever desired. With the four en route, that makes a total of 17 divisions available to be flung at Australia.

Japanese divisions comprise 20,000 men, 18,000 of them combat troops and the remainder supply forces.

On this basis, an army of 17 divisions—340,000 men—could be assembled to make the Australian invasion attempt.

This is a formidable enough number to make the battle of Australia one of the bitterest in the history of the world, but sources here estimate that the enemy should have a half million to be reasonably assured of success right now.

More Japanese troops are likely to be available soon from other points along the bloody trail of Nipponese conquest, but in the meantime, the United Nations also are building up fast.

Plane Losses Are High

A compilation of Japanese air losses and their output of planes also is an encouraging one.

With their total first line planes at the war's outset put at between 4000 and 5000, they have lost 1100 of them, not counting those crippled on the ground. Production estimates in some quarters of 500 to 600 new aircraft a month in Japan were held by these sources as being entirely too high, with the probable figure 350 to 400 a month.

Also encouraging is the estimate that the enemy had four million tons of shipping available December 7, but that this figure has been reduced by one million tons sunk or seriously damaged.

Sources furnishing these figures reached the conclusion that Japan probably would try to take only air bases on the North Australian coast, for use in trying to halt United States help to the commonwealth.

U-Boat Attacks St. Lucia Island, Site of U. S. Base

Castries, St. Lucia, British West Indies, March 13 (AP).—An enemy submarine has attacked Castries harbor, damaging two ships and causing slight casualties, British authorities disclosed today.

The attack occurred Monday night.

A brief official announcement did not say whether the attack was by torpedo or shellfire.

St. Lucia lies about 20 miles south of the French island of Martinique and is the site of one of the defense bases obtained by the United States from Great Britain in exchange for 50 destroyers.

Anti-Nazi Crowds In Rio Dispersed

Rio de Janeiro, March 13 (AP).—Shots fired into the air by police and riot squads dispersed a crowd of 500 persons gathering today in front of German stores, apparently intent on resuming yesterday's anti-Nazi disorders.

Newspapers and radio stations told nothing of yesterday's riots except the official announcement that "special measures were taken to maintain order."

At noontime a crowd again halted traffic in one of the main avenues. Many were injured.

Japs Drive 100 Miles on Road To Mandalay

By the United Press

London, March 13.—Japanese troops have driven 100 miles up the 360-mile road from Rangoon to Mandalay in an attempt to throw a wedge between British troops on the right and Chinese armies on the left wing of the Burma defense arc. Far Eastern dispatches said today.

Operations now "are proceeding" in the Shwegyin-Nyaunglegin area, 100 miles north of the fallen Burmese capital of Rangoon, according to a communique from Gen. Sir Archibald Wavell's supreme command headquarters at New Delhi.

(The German radio said fighting ranged as far north as Toungoo, 165 miles above Rangoon and less than 200 from Mandalay.)

British imperials, withdrawn from Rangoon and the southwest Burma Pennisula, have stabilized their lines near Tharawaddy, on the Rangoon-Prome Railway 65 miles northwest of Rangoon, the communique said. The British line extended from Tharawaddy 85 miles west to the Bay of Bengal, and east to the Mandalay Road.

The Chinese were defending a long line through the Shan States of East Central Burma to the Thailand border. A London military commentator said British and Chinese were operating "in the neighborhood" of one another but there still were no reports of their fighting together. He said the main Japanese pressure was directed at the British on the Mandalay Road.

Thus, although the British appared to have secured their lines to the west while the Chinese held in the north and east, a gap existed in the brush and jungle country along the Mandalay road and the Japanese were driving up the road attempting to keep the Allies apart.

(The Berlin radio said heavy rains had turned the middle Burma roads to mud.)

Mandalay dispatches indicated that the Japanese had moved into the lower reaches of the Irrawaddy delta below Rangoon, probably landing from boats, to hasten the occupation of the southern tip of Burma.

Russia a Pistol Pointed At Japan, Wavell Says

New Delhi, India, March 13 (AP).—Britain's Gen. Wavell disclosed tonight his plans for defending eastern India with mobile ground forces and a hard-striking air arm capable of both defense and attack, and dropped the significant hint that from the other side Soviet Russia right now, is "a pistol pointed at the heart" of Japan.

Now commanding both India and Murma, Gen. Wavell outlined his problems, tasks and hopes at an unusual press conference.

Wavell termed the defense of India a problem "of very close cooperation between the services and of treating it as such; of building up a strong air force in northeast India which will not content itself with defense but will attack the enemy and will be one of our principal means of safeguarding India."

New airdromes are being built and the present air strength is being reinforced constantly, Wavell declared, and regular naval forces are being augmented by armed flotillas of vessels requisitioned from civilian uses.

churia, where the Russian position serious and difficult, the best tonic is to consider the difficulties of the enemy. There is no possible doubt of the difficulties and dangers under which Japan is suffering.

"She is operating on an enormous front and at a considerable distance from home. Besides, she always has to consider the danger from Manchuria, where the Russian Position is like a pistol pointed at the heart of her home country.

"Her supplies of essential war materials are limited to her manufacturing capacity. Possible replacements for losses in aircraft, of which she already has lost considerable numbers, are comparatively small; certainly very small when compared with the resources of her enemies.

"Around her are mighty nations—mightier if Russia comes in."

British Labor Paper Renews Demand for Second War Front

Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc.

London (Saturday), March 14.—A renewed demand for the opening of a second front against the Axis in Europe leads this week's issue of the Tribune, the influential labor publication, out today.

The Tribune asserted "that every resource at the disposal of the British and American Governments, every nerve and sinew of the Allied nations, should be concentrated upon one vast explosive effort, during this spring and summer" in Europe . . . "to engage Germany on such a scale with such violence in conjunction with our Soviet allies as will rally the whole continent of Europe to our cause and smash the German war machine before the winter of 1942 closes in upon us."

"It can be done. The people of Great Britain want it done. They want to see us setting about it now, and the politicians who refuse to do it will themselves not survive 1942," the article concludes.

The Tribune was founded by Sir Stafford Cripps, who directed it until his recent appointment as lord privy seal and deputy leader of the House of Commons and a member of the war cabinet.

Swedish Papers Seized

Stockholm, March 13 (U.P.).—Ten newspapers seized by the Swedish government yesterday were publishing eyewitness accounts from 14 escaped Norwegians of their tortures at the hands of Germans, and the action was taken to forestall German protests, it was revealed today.

The Norwegians had escaped from Gestapo prisons.

Rationing in Mexico

Mexico City, March 13 (AP).—Machinery for the rationing of all new motor vehicles and tires—both domestic and imported—was set up by the Mexican government today under two presidential decrees establishing a war priorities system similar to that in the United States.

The decrees direct all importers, assembly plants, retailers and manufacturers to register with the ministry of national economy, giving full details of their present stocks.

Infractions are to be punishable by fines ranging from $200 to $4000.

Australia Is Last Buffer, Curtin Warns

By the Associated Press.

Canberra, Australia, (Saturday), March 14.—Prime Minister John Curtin warned the United States in a broadcast today that "Australia is the last bastion between the West Coast of America and the Japanese."

"If Australia goes the Americas are wide open," he said.

Stressing that attack is the best defense, Curtin asserted: "I say to you that saving Australia is saving America's West Coast. If you believe anything to the contrary you delude yourselves."

The prime minister's latter statement was prompted by what he said were reports going the rounds that the Japanese would bypass Australia and that they could be met and routed in India.

"The tide of war flows madly," he said. "For you in America, for us in Australia, it is flowing badly. Let me then address you as comrades in this war."

An Australia "fighting mad" is sending its minister for external affairs to the United States to further Australian-American cooperation in the war, he said.

Dr. Herbert V. Evatt, the Australian cabinet minister, is being sent to Washington with his American-born wife, Curtin said, because "we looked to America, among other things, for counsel and advice, and therefore it was our wish that the Pacific War Council should be located at Washington." It is, he said, "a matter of regret" that "after 95 days of Japan's staggering advance south . . . we have not obtained first-hand contact with America."

McNutt Assails U.S. Appeasers, Isolationists

Paul V. McNutt, Federal Security administrator, yesterday ripped into prewar isolationists and pacifists and predicted that America would remain a great military nation for a long time to come.

Speaking before the Association of Military Colleges and Schools, the former high commissioner to the Philippines, asserted tersely:

"We built for peace in an ivory tower.

"We have all been too slow to learn.

"We have all been too complacent."

Blasting out at those whom President Roosevelt labeled an American "Cliveden set," he declared that we bend our ears too readily to whispers—"as though we were unwilling to believe the cruel facts that face us."

He praised the Nation's military schools for keeping alive a fighting spirit while "puerile pacifism," "fake economy," and 'ostrich isolationism" hampered our defenses.

"Yes, pacifism pulled the cork and let the evil genie of Japanese militarism out of its bottle," he asserted. "As isolationists would have it, America had only to defend its beaches. Its international interests ended with wading depth at Coney Island on the one hand and on the sun-drenched sands of La Jolla on the other.

"Look across the seas to the Philippines if you would learn a lesson. Because America did not face its responsibility frankly and realistically through the years, we must now fulfill our obligation the hard way," he said.

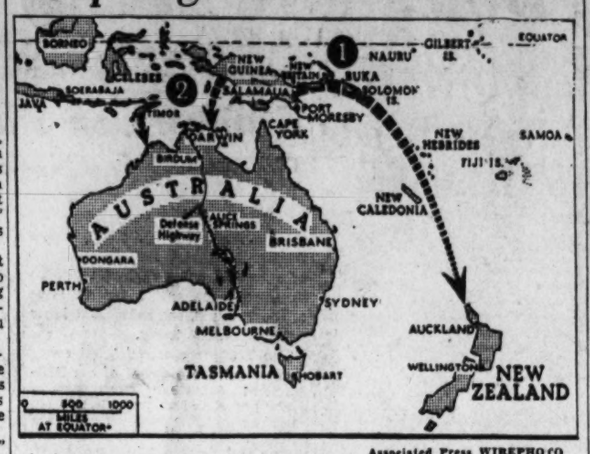
Earlier, the military school teachers heard a report of soldiers in service who graduated from private military schools and have distinguished themselves, by Maj. E. W. Tucker, of Kemper Military School, in Boonville, Mo. The list presented by Tucker was long—starting with Gen. Marshall and Gen. MacArthur and including Capt. Colin P. Kelly and other heroes.

Crew Fired On In Rail Strike

Peoria, Ill., March 13 (AP).—An assailant opened fire from a clump of bushes with a shotgun tonight, wounding three members of a train crew on the strike-beset Toledo, Peoria & Western Railroad.

In the latest outbreak of violence in the 2½-month-old strike, E. C. Pittman, engineer; Bert Taylor, fireman, and Harold Kipling, chief special agent for the railroad, were injured in the head. Physicians said Taylor might lose the sight of an eye.

Japs Sighted Off Solomons



Associated Press WIREPHOTO

ENEMY STRATEGY IN ATTACK ON AUSTRALIA—Their spearhead of attack on Australia blunted on New Guinea's northeast coast, Japs have apparently struck off on a new tangent, past New Britain, toward the Solomon Islands, where a Jap naval force was sighted by the R. A. A. F. off Buka. Such an offensive (1) might carry them through the New Hebrides to New Zealand—which would encircle Australia to the east, blocking Allied supply routes. This may be a feint, however, to mask an attack from Timor or New Guinea on Australia's northwest or north coast (2) islands which curve southward to New Zealand.

Japs Sighted Off Buka

An Australian Air Force communique said a Japanese naval force had been sighted three days ago off Kessa, on the Solomon Island of Buka. A landing was not definitely announced, but such an intention subsequently was indicated.

Australian reconnaissance fliers reported the Japanese were working at feverish speed to establish fighter plane bases on New Guinea's northeast coast.

One such field, at Gasmata, on the south coast of neighboring New Britain, was subjected to a smashing bombardment, the R. A. A. F. reported. It said all bombs fell in the target area, from which columns of smoke arose.

The raiders returned safely after fighting off Japanese pursuit craft, one of which was damaged.

Both on New Britain and New Guinea the Australian and American raids were said to have dashed Japanese plans for speedy control of the islands and creation of big bases for the battle of Australia.

Australians said New Guinea's lack of roads to connect the Japanese beach heads with other points, the cruel mountains and cliffs, its dense rain, forests and valley jungles would slow down the invaders.

An overland drive to the south coast, fronting the Australian mainland across Torres Strait, would be harder than the advance down the Malaya Peninsula, some observers said.

As for sea assault, an air force spokesman said the only Japanese fleet known to be in striking distance was that a Salamaua, northeast of New Guinea, which lost at least seven ships in an air attack Tuesday.

Prime Minister Curtin said that Justice Lowe of the Victoria Supreme Court, was inquiring into Japanese air raids on Australia's northern port of Darwin to disclose if there were any shortcomings among military or civilian authorities.

The cabinet decided to enforce a national security regulation requiring any resident of Australia to perform any duties in relation to his occupation.

This could mean a complete ban on strikes during the war.

Edward J. Ward, minister of labor and national services, said changes in the reserved-occupation system would be made to enlarge eligibility for military service.

Malayan Casualties, 17,031

were seven."

[The Bern radio said Moscow had reported that after violent fighting an important center of German resistance had been captured by the Russian on the central front.]

Matching these achievements were continued advances in the south.

Marshal Semeon Timoshenko's massive Ukrainian offensive was slowly beating forward, a week ahead of the return of calendar spring to Russia.

The official publication of the Russian armies, Red Star, declared that Russian arms had so firmly seized the initiative that the new season would bring not the long-threatened German counteroffensive but rather a continuation of aggressive action against Hitler's "worn-out army."

Somewhere in the south (where Timoshenko was reported by Russian sources in London to be attacking with more than a million men on a vast front extending from the Sea of Azov northward to the upper Ukraine) military dispatches announced two Nazi fortified areas had been smashed and spoke of toe-to-toe fighting in the streets of Donets Basin towns.

Nazis Admit Defensive

(The German high command admitted the Nazi forces were on the defensive in the Donets Basin of the Ukraine, counterattacking "strong enemy forces." British military observers assumed Timoshenko was trying to recapture the whole of the Dnieper River bend. His advanced troops already had been reported within 30 miles of the bend in the area northeast of Dnieperopetrovsk.)

Three southern-front settlements, one a railway station, were cleared of invaders in tank, artillery and infantry fighting.

Students Ready for Raids

La Grande, Oreg., (U.P.).—Eastern Oregon college students have formed their own air raid protection unit and first aid corps. Twenty student fire wardens and five student police wardens already have registered with the county chairman and have been fingerprinted at the La Grande police station.

areas. The roar of their bombs and the bark of challenging antiaircraft guns rolled back across the waters to the southeast coast.

Thus with rising fury the R. A. F. was putting into action the words of its chieftain, Sir Archibald Sinclair, secretary for air, last month that "we must take Germany by the throat and shake the strength out of her; we must start not in 1944 or 1943, but in 1942."

The Germans acknowledged that the attack on Kiel caused some casualties. They also said the R. A. F. was over northwest France during the night, but the air ministry said no British planes were in that area.

Make Reconnaissance

From Vichy came the announcement that R. A. F. reconnaissance planes flew over Paris during the day, forcing suspension of horse racing at the Vincennes track. During a 45-minute alert in the occupied French capital the British craft surveyed the manufacturing area in the southwestern workers district.

No bombs were dropped by these craft, which apparently were gathering information on bombing raids recently on the German-commandeered French plants turning out equipment for Hitler's war machine.

Europe Warned of Raids

London, March 13 (U.P.).—The mysterious "Col. Britton" tonight warned "western Europe" that the R. A. F. soon would bomb again the factories which are manufacturing goods for the German war machine.

Col. Britton said:

"These attacks are necessary—Britain cannot allow the uninterrupted production of arms and munitions for the use of Nazi Germany."

"Here is a warning for you to get away from these factories."

Lucas Likens Langer's Acts To Hitler's

By Robert De Vore
Post Staff Writer

Senator Lucas (Democrat), of Illinois, yesterday charged in the Senate that William Langer, of North Dakota, is guilty of moral turpitude "beyond any reasonable doubt" and in his official life has aped the tactics of Hitler.

Thus Lucas, declaiming in the manner of a prosecuting attorney making his final argument, brought to a close five days of temper-testing debate, marking the end of the first phase of the Senate's trial of the moral character of Langer and his right to sit as a Republican Senator.

When the Senate reconvenes on Monday, the Langer defense is due to take the floor. Senator Murdock (Democrat), of Utah, yesterday obtained the promise of Majority Leader Barkley that he will be recognized next. Murdock is one of three members of the 17-man Elections Committee who dissented from the committee's majority opinion that Langer is unfit to be a Senator.

From the earliest days of his public career, through his second term as North Dakota Governor in 1937-38, Lucas charged, Langer has displayed indifference to method in sweeping aside obstacles to his objectives.

Referring to his first term as Governor in 1934, when Langer declared martial law for the purpose, the committee maintains, of suspending civil processes and blocking his impending ouster, Lucas shouted:

"You can go into his dying moments as Governor and see the same pattern . . . when anything got in his way he eliminated it, with Hitler tactics, if you please."

While Langer sat calmly sucking, as usual, an unlighted cigarette, Lucas called "most despicable" the fact that Langer paid $275 to the lawyer son of a judge before whom he was being tried on a conspiracy charge. Lucas said: "Any man on the up and up would have gone to the judge and told him what was going on."

Reviewing the committee's charge that Langer accepted $25,000 for "worthless" stock from Thomas Sullivan, Chicago attorney, who represented the Great Northern Railway during the company's negotiations for lower tax valuations, Lucas declared:

"If that isn't moral turpitude, if there isn't chicanery in that kind of case, I don't understand testimony."

7 Nazi Spies Are Sentenced To Terms Totaling 117 Years

By Seth Moseley
Associated Press Staff Writer

New York, March 13.—Seven convicted Nazi spies—six stoical men and a 26-year-old housewife with a cold smile on her lips—were sentenced today to Federal Prison to serve a total of 117 years for transmitting United States defense secrets to Germany.

The court wasted no sympathy in handing out punishment.

"I am not only punishing you for your treachery," said Judge Henry W. Goddard, "but warning others like you that such acts will not be tolerated."

The seven spies—two others who pleaded guilty are to be sentenced later—escaped the war-time penalty of hanging because their espionage took place before the outbreak of war, although the trial was not held until last month.

The Government said the tightly knit ring had gathered and sent abroad shipping data responsible for the sinking of at least 12 Allied vessels by U-boats in the Atlantic last summer and fall.

Trapped by School Girl

Lucy Boehmler, an 18-year-old high school girl who joined the ring "for fun" and later tattled, was the Government's chief witness.

Most important of those sentenced was cockey Kurt Frederick Ludwig, 38, a native of Fremont, Ohio, who grew up in Germany. The No. 1 man who directed the ring's efforts as a trained Nazi spy, he was sentenced to 20 years, the maximum possible penalty.

Next was Dr. Paul T. Borchardt, 56, German citizen and former German army major who analyzed data collected by the ring. Born a Jew, he later embraced Christianity and Mohammedanism in the interests of Germany's espionage services. He also got 20 years.

The others sentenced were:

Rene Froehlich, 31, an Army private when arrested; who sold Ludwig magazines containing defense data and gathered shipping information; 20 years.

Mrs. Helen Pauline Mayer, 26, Long Island housewife; who opened her house to the ring and helped obtain information and mail espionage letters; 15 years.

Karl Victor Mueller, 36, a Long Island machinist, the ring's chauffeur; helped Ludwig collect some of the defense data; 15 years.

Frederick Schlosser, 19, former head of a Brooklyn German-American youth group, sentenced to 12 years, and Hans Helmut Pagel, 20-year-old machinist, who pleaded guilty during trial, 15 years.

Miss Boehmler, who motored South at one time to help Ludwig gather data, and Carl Hermann Schroetter, a Miami (Fla.) fishing boat captain, pleaded guilty before trial.

At the trial's start it was disclosed that a cab driven by Sam Lichtman had struck Ulrich von der Osten, a master spy, here to direct the ring's efforts. From papers found in his pockets, the FBI got its first leads. Meanwhile, in a totally different locale, Walter Morrissey, a boiler engineer, so arranged the boiler at the German consulate that when the Germans burned consular papers last summer, most of the papers were not destroyed. The documents helped to smash the ring.

Sir Gerald Reappointed British Minister Here

Sir Gerald Campbell has been reappointed British Minister in Washington, resuming the position which he left last June 6 to become director general of the British information services in the United States, it was announced yesterday by the British press service.

Sir Gerald, it was said, will continue to direct the British information services, which includes the British library of information, but will make Washington his headquarters. Sir Gerald was appointed British Minister to the United States on January 15, 1941.

District Boy, 9, Dies After Fall During Chase

A 9-year-old boy died yesterday in Children's Hospital of injuries suffered when he fell in the course of being chased by a watchman near Bellevue Wednesday.

The boy, William J. Quinland, 6 Sextant Green Southwest, was first treated in Casualty Hospital. Death was due to internal injuries.

According to police, William was playing with some other boys near a housing development when Walter W. Schier, a watchman, of 414 Sixth Street Northwest, told them to leave. Schier said the boys began throwing stones at him and he chased them. William tripped over some railroad tracks.

in America throughout the first World War. He escaped punishment, and when Hitler came to power in 1933 he resumed his operations. With the prestige of a gifted novelist and a popular magazine writer, Viereck reached into high places—even the United States Congress—for contacts he could use to advance the Nazi and hurt the British cause.

Didn't Report All of Work

By the time the war drew near, Viereck had set up a huge propaganda machine. With passage of the Foreign Agents Act, he registered with a show of candor, describing himself as an author and journalist, who drew $500 a month as correspondent of the Munich newspaper Neueste Nachrichten. Later he admitted he was on the payroll of the official propaganda agency, German Library of Information, for $2500 a month.

Special Prosecutors Maloney and Edward J. Rickey, jr., in a long investigation before the special grand jury on Axis agents, uncovered a vast propaganda machine which Viereck had not reported.

Viereck got control of a publishing house, Flanders Hall, Inc., through which he issued a series of venomously anti-British books. He wrote speeches which the late Senator Ernest Lundeen (Farmer Labor), of Minnesota, delivered in the Senate. Through other collaborators he caused a series of isolationist speeches to be placed in the Congressional Record.

Representative Hamilton Fish instructed one of his secretaries, George Hill, 45—who went to jail for perjury for denying that he knew Viereck, then told the whole story—to mail out one of the Lundeen speeches for Viereck. Hill later handled other speeches for Viereck, and this Nazi propaganda was mailed out by the ton, under Congressional frank.

Viereck did not take the stand at his trial to deny any of this.

But yesterday—not under oath and secure from cross examination by the caustic special prosecutors—he read off a 1000-word plea for leniency.

"In a sense I am a victim of Pearl Harbor," said Viereck, "a victim of the vindictive campaign waged by the press and radio. If there were no war psychosis I would not have been indicted."

Still Believes in "Peace"

Viereck said he advocated peace between England, America and Germany and still believed in it. He referred to his sons, George, now in the Army, and Dr. Peter Viereck, who will soon be in uniform.

Prosecutor Maloney called this plea a "diatribe" and said Viereck's sentence was much less that he would "have received in the country for which he spoke—Germany."

Viereck's lawyer, Emil Morosini, jr., who was put out of the case by Justice Letts for misbehavior, was not in court for the sentencing. Viereck's other counsel, Col. O. R. McGuire and Daniel F. Cohalen, jr., filed the appeal, in which they said the Foreign Agents Act was not constitutional, that Justice Letts received improper evidence and that the German agent was harmed by the conduct of Postmaster Maloney during the trial.

Obana wa sone of six persons indicted after an investigation by Special Prosecutors Albert E. Arent and Arthur B. Caldwell. Those accused with him, of conspiracy and failing to register properly as Japanese agents, were Ralph Townsend, Scribner's Commentator writer; two other Americans, and two other Japanese.

Pay-Off Men Escape

Not made defendants but named coconspirators were two former Japanese consuls in San Francisco, described as the pay-off men for the Japanese Committee on Trade and Information.

U. S. Fund to Aid Families Victimized by Enemy Action

A fund of $750,000 for benefit payments to dependents of American citizens affected by enemy action outside the United States was allocated yesterday to the Social Security Board.

Monthly payments will be made to wives or widows and children of U. S. citizens killed, disabled or detained in foreign countries by Axis actions.

The benefits will not be paid to dependents of persons in military or civilian establishments of the Federal Government.

The $750,000 allocated is part of the $5,000,000 earmarked by President Roosevelt to provide "temporary aid necessitated by enemy action" resulting in death, injury, detention or disappearance of American civilians.

The Social Security Board will administer the fund through its Bureau of Old-Age and Survivors Insurance.

The following scale has been established:

A widow or wife without children will receive between $30 and $45 monthly; with one child between $40 and $60 monthly; with two children, between $50 and $75 per month, and with three or more children, between $60 and $85 monthly.

Exact amount of the payments will be determined by the salary earned by the civilian affected by enemy action.

Benefits will terminate upon remarriage or death of a widow; upon death or divorce or a wife; upon cessation of total disability of the person injured as a result of enemy action, or on release of the civilian detained by the enemy.

An additional $500,000 from the $5,000,000 general fund has been allocated to the Public Health Service, Administrator McNutt said, to be used for emergency medical aid and hospitalization in case enemy action hits any United States community.

Sen. McKellar Defends Crump, Brands Evans' Charge Untrue

By the Associated Press

Senator McKellar (Democrat), Tennessee, asserted in the Senate yesterday that charges made against the Ed Crump political organization of Memphis by Silliman Evans, newspaper publisher, were "wilfully, deliberately malicious and wickedly untrue."

Evans, who is publisher of the Nashville Tennesseean and the Chicago Sun, told a Senate subcommittee Thursday that poll tax laws had permitted Crump to build such a political organization that it was almost impossible to defeat a Crump-supported candidate in Tennessee.

Declaring the Crump group depended in no way on the payment of poll taxes to keep its organization intact, McKellar said Evans' charges constituted "a base and ignorantly spoken calumny."

Crump, McKellar said, had built up a "splendid political organization" in Memphis which "brooks no cheating or dishonesty."

Senator Stewart (Democrat), of Tennessee, indorsed "every word" that McKellar had said. Stewart said the city of Memphis had "grown and prospered" chiefly under the leadership of Crump and declared the city government was "strictly honest."

Harry Koger, C. I. O. organizer, told the subcommittee yesterday that governments in Arkansas and Tennessee were under control of "top-ranking farmers and big plantation owners" as a result of poll tax laws.

Koger and others urged the subcommittee to approve the bill by Senator Pepper (Democrat), of Florida, which would outlaw poll taxes as a prerequisite for voting for Federal officials.

Beutel Protests

Frederick K. Beutel, law professor at William and Mary College, Williamsburg, Va., told the committee the Virginia State poll tax law cost "thousands of professional persons like myself" the right to vote because of a requirement that a voter must pay it for three years to be eligible.

Paul Scharenberg, who spoke for President William Green of the American Federation of Labor, asserted most of the "labor baiters in Congress" were Southern Democrats, adding that apparently because of the Poll tax "working people of the South are unable to show they resent the labor-baiting speeches in Congress."

Yelverton Cowheard, lawyer and C. I. O. regional director at Birmingham, Ala., testified he had affidavits showing that large corporations in Alabama had paid the poll taxes of large groups of their employes "although this was a felony under the Alabama State law."

O'Leary Calls Vinson Bill Peril to C. of C.

Copyright by Chicago Sun

John W. O'Leary, of Chicago, chairman of the executive committee of the United States Chamber of Commerce, yesterday warned a subcommittee of the House Judiciary Committee that passage of the Vinson bill to require Federal registration and financial inspection of trade associations and labor unions would impair seriously the work of national and State chambers of commerce.

"Our membership is purely voluntary," said O'Leary, "and the implication of Federal regulation probably would have a strong disintegrating influence upon our organizations."

He protested the classification of trade associations with labor unions in the proposed measure, since the trade groups are not concerned with negotiations regarding wages, work hours and the like.

He said that "trade associations are too busily engaged in helping with war problems to be harassed with new legislative problems that have no significance to the war effort."

N. P. Alifas, chairman of the legislative committee of the American Federation of Labor's metal trades department, asserted that the "interim and current" reports that the Secretary of Commerce could call for under the Vinson bill might become instruments of involuntary servitude.

Reports made to the Secretary of Commerce by labor organizations, at his discretion, could be made public, Alifas continued, and he contended that this would be objectionable to labor because:

1. Labor unions thus would have their organization strength and weaknesses disclosed to their enemies.

2. Newspaper publishers and owners would then subject unions to public attacks through their editorial columns and through a number of columnists "whose duty it seems to be to find fault with labor unions."

Little Business Held 'Goat' of NAM Tax Plan

By Felix Cotten

International News Service Staff Writer

The National Association of Manufacturers was accused by Representative Cooper (Democrat), of Tennessee, at a House Ways and Means Committee hearing yesterday of trying to "soak" small companies in order to lighten the tax burden of large corporations.

Cooper made the accusation while committee members were questioning J. Cheever Cowdin, chairman of the association's Government finance committee, who presented, on behalf of the organization, a tax program designed to raise between $7,600,000,000 and $8,000,000,000 additional revenue a year.

Under the N. A. M. plan advanced as a substitute for the Treasury tax program, $1,500,000,000 of additional revenue a year would be raised by higher corporation excess profits and normal taxes, instead of $3,060,000,000, as urged by the Treasury.

Greater Tax Credits Too

Cooper charged that the N. A. M. proposal would result in a reduction in taxes of many large corporations.

The N. A. M. proposal calls for a 90 per cent excess profits tax on corporations, together with a 40 per cent normal tax, whereas the Treasury plan includes an excess profits tax running up to 75 per cent and a normal tax of 55 per cent on large corporations.

Much more liberal excess-profits tax credits would be allowed corporations under the N. A. M. plan, however, than under existing law. The result would be to greatly reduce the amount of corporation profits that would be taxable, as excess profits, at the 90 per cent rate.

Taking a hypothetical case, Cooper declared that a corporation earning 100 million dollars a year would pay, under particular conditions, a total Federal tax bill of 47 million dollars under present law, and only 40 million dollars under the N. A. M. plan.

Debt Limit Increase Asked

Cowdin disputed this figure.

"If that is so," he asked, "where is the $1,500,000,000 which we propose to raise by corporation taxes coming from?"

"I will tell you where the $1,500,000,000 would come from," Cooper shot back. "You would soak the smaller companies more in order to let the bigger ones off."

Meanwhile, Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau, testifying before the Senate Finance Committee, urged speedy action on the bill, already passed by the House, to increase the Government debt limit from 65 billion dollars to 125 billion dollars.

He told the committee the Government will be unable to borrow money next month to finance the war unless the bill is passed before that time.

OPA Frowns On Hike in Rail Freight Rates

By the Associated Press

Concerned over the possible effect on price structures, the Office of Price Administration undertook yesterday to head off any increase in railroad freight rates on 10 groups of commodities.

At the same time, an official indicated there was considerable sentiment in the agency that general increases of 6 per cent on industrial freight and 3 per cent on farm products, recently approved by the Interstate Commerce Commission, should be shelved and, if necessary, Government subsidies paid to railroads running into the red because of rising operating costs.

It was estimated that, on the basis of 1941 business, the increases approved would bring in 203 million dollars and that additional business in 1942 might raise this to 225 million dollars. The carriers already have put into effect a 10 per cent increase in passenger fares expected to yield 46 to 50 million dollars annually.

In addition, the ICC yesterday authorized a 10 per cent increase in rates, fares and charges of the Pullman Co., effective ten days after tariffs are filed with the commission.

Lists Commodities

OPA, saying it understood the railroads intended to make the authorized freight rate increases effective March 18, asked the ICC to forbid any increase before April 15 in rates on cement, copper ores and concentrates, iron and steel scrap, lead ores and concentrates, lumber and lumber products (except finished products), pig iron, rubber scrap, crude sulphur, petroleum and petroleum products, and nonferrous scrap. OPA said that if the increases were deferred it would negotiate meantime with the railroads to exempt the ten commodities from the general increase.

Speaking before the railroad committee of 21 in New York, Dexter M. Keezer, assistant price administrator, said OPA might ask later for revocation of the entire rate increase. He mentioned Government subsidy of financially weak carriers as an alternative. The committee is made up of railroad traffic officers designated by the lines to work with the ICC on rate matters.

The railroads based their plea to the ICC for higher rates chiefly on the fact that an arbitration board had approved wage increases for railroad employes amounting to about 300 million dollars a year.

In asking postponement of any increase in rates on the ten groups of commodities, the OPA said:

"The price structure on these commodities is extremely sensitive. Price ceilings have been established on most of them, and stabilization actions have been taken on all of them. An increase of 6 per cent in transportation costs via carriers on these commodities would necessitate immediate upward revision of the ceiling."

Stimson Returns From Canal Inspection

Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson returned yesterday from a flying inspection tour of the Panama Canal and said the already-bolstered defense of the vital waterway will be improved "still more."

He said after a Cabinet meeting that the canal's defenses "are improving and I expect we will be improving them still more. That is what I went down there for."

Henderson in Rio To Get Rubber Shipments Made

Leon Henderson, price administrator, has flown to Rio de Janeiro to hold talks with Brazilian authorities looking to working out a formula satisfactory to Brazil and the United States under which Brazil will agree to ship rubber under the Dacosta-Welles pact signed recently, it was learned yesterday.

Henderson is also expected to take up the question of coffee shipments to the United States, in view of the fact that President Getulio Vargas has recalled all Brazilian ships back to port following the torpedoing of four Brazilian ships in the last week.

Meantime, the War Production Board announced that reclaimed rubber is still available for the manufacture of rubber heels. The board made the announcement to end a run on dealers' and suppliers' stocks following publication of a report to the effect that the board had banned production of rubber heels.

Norwegian Ship Sunk Off Delaware announced, an enemy submarine made an attack on the island and damaged two vessels last Monday.

The United States has an outpost of its Caribbean defenses on the Windward Island, but the submarine attack was said to have been directed at a part of the island a considerable distance from the base.

Norwegian Ship Goes Down in 90 Seconds

Philadelphia, March 13 (AP).—Two torpedoes from an enemy submarine sank a small Norwegian merchant ship within 90 seconds off the Delaware-Maryland coast last Tuesday night, killing the captain and possibly five others, the Fourth Naval District announced tonight.

Fourteen survivors, including one American, James Ingolf Bast, 18, of New Orleans, got away in the nick of time and landed the next morning on Fenwick Island beach, near Lewes, Del.

The submarine attacked without warning, declared Second Mate Harry Olsen, 27, of Norway, one of the survivors.

"I was standing on the bridge with the captain," he related. "When the first torpedo hit close to the stern, it tore away the whole stern. The second torpedo followed almost immediately and hit amidships, on the starboard side."

Olsen estimated the torpedoes were fired from a distance of half a mile. He added the sub did not come to the surface. Under a new ruling the Navy did not announce the name of the vessel.

Pan Norway's Skipper Tells of Fighting Subs

Weehawken, N. J., March 13 (U.P.).—The captain of the Norwegian tanker Pan Norway, shelled and set afire by two German submarines 600 miles east of Bermuda, told today how his gun crew fought a running battle with the U-boats for a half hour before he ordered all hands to abandon ship.

Capt. John Bach, 43-year-old Norwegian skipper, arrived here today with six of his crew on the same ship that had picked up his entire crew of 40 in mid-Atlantic and taken them to Lisbon.

Bach said "several hundred" shells were fired by the submarines, one on each side of his ship, and "I do not know of any that missed."

One of the submarines halted the neutral rescue ship to pass aboard a wounded seaman its crew had fished out of the sea.

One lifeboat capsized as it was being launched, spilling 12 men into the water, but all were picked up with the submarine's help. Two other lifeboats and a dinghy were launched safely.

Beaverbrook Will Accept U. S. Mission After All

Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc.

London, March 13.—Lord Beaverbrook finally has decided to accept the post offered him when he was dropped from the government last month by Prime Minister Winston Churchill, and will leave soon for Washington, where he will act in connection with the pooling of the war resources of the United Nations, it was learned in London tonight.

The former production minister's decision to go to the United States followed a lengthy conference with Churchill today. In the House of Commons yesterday the Prime Minister, in response to questions, admitted that he was not sure whether the "Beaver" was going to accept the Washington post.

Union Offers To Give Up Six-Hour Day

New York, March 13 (AP).—Seventeen thousand electrical workers who have worked a 6-hour day, 30-hour week since 1936 to protect their ranks against unemployment volunteered today to work eight hours a day henceforth on all defense jobs. Union officials said it was hoped that the increased hours would make skilled labor available in sections of the country where there is a shortage.

Westinghouse Proposes Cut

Pittsburgh, March 13 (AP).—The "Union Generator," a publication of the C. I. O. United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers Union, said today the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co., in contract negotiations, had proposed the "elimination of all overtime wages except as provided by law."

In addition, the periodical reported, the company is seeking discontinuance of all holidays, except Christmas; extension of women's night work hours in classifications permitted by law; elimination of the incentive system; and discontinuance of group insurance.

The present contract provides for time-and-a-half pay for hourly paid workers working more than eight hours in any one day; time and a half for Saturday; and double time for Sunday and holidays. An incentive payment is made for increased production.

Pay Limit Studied, Roosevelt Says

port was expected to be adverse.

Senator Lee (Democrat), of Oklahoma, wrote to Donald Nelson, chairman of the War Production Board, asking recommendations on legislation to put more men to work and ease the overtime problem.

A proposal that overtime payments be made in nonnegotiable bonds, that could be kept out of the inflation stream for the duration of the war, was made by Senator Brown during Senate Finance Committee hearings.

At his morning press conference the President indicated that no definite conclusions had yet been reached on wage ceilings, though the whole subject was under study.

Questioned on a recent meeting at the White House at which wage control was discussed, mentioned by Mrs. Roosevelt in her newspaper column, the President said he had not participated in the meeting. Mrs. Roosevelt in her column favored freezing of wages, profits and prices and urged that all men and women be drafted for assignment to whatever war service they were best able to perform.

Sees Labor Committee

After his press conference the President had a talk with members of his joint war labor committee, comprised of three A. F. of L. and three C. I. O. officials. President Green, of the A. F. of L., and President Murray, of the C. I. O., declined to say what was discussed but indicated another conference would be held next week.

In asking defense and labor chiefs for information on the war labor picture, to be elaborated before his Appropriations Subcommittee next week, Senator Thomas, of Oklahoma, said he had received "literally thousands" of letters condemning Congress and the Administration for alleged labor "bottlenecks" in war production. He estimated that 75 per cent of Senatorial mail is on that subject, and said he "wants to get the facts."

His request for prepared statements, to be submitted to his subcommittee, went to Donald Nelson, war production chief; Secretary of War Stimson, Secretary of Navy Knox, Lieut. Gen. Knudsen, chairman of the Maritime Commission; to Green and Murray and other organized labor leaders.

He wrote Nelson that "due to statements made in the press, over the radio and in addresses, the public has the impression that our war-production program is not progressing as it should."

Report On Public Pulse

"Obviously," his letters stated, "the public has been led to believe that our program is being held back—

"(a) By the operation of the 40-hour week law;

"(b Exorbitantly high prices being paid for labor; and

"(c) The prevalance of and the increasing of strikes in defense industries."

Thomas advised each official of a long list of charges that hours limitations and strikes are impeding production and asked them to answer the following seven questions which he said are being put 'repeatedly" to Congressmen:

"Why are we not able to increase production of military supplies more rapidly?

"Why are men not drafted for work in defense industry?

Why Union Dues?

"Why does the Government permit to exist a policy of requiring men who desire to secure work in defense plant construction and in defense manufacturing industries to pay a certain sum to any person or organization in order to secure a job?

"Why not place all defense plants on a 24-hour production basis?

"Under war conditions and when boys are drafted and paid $21.00 per month, why is it necessary to pay wages at the rate of time and a half and double time for work in defense plant construction and operation?

"Why should not defense plants operate 24 hours per day and on Sundays and holidays?

"What specific thing or things should or can be done to provide the 25 per cent increase in the defense output as demanded by Donald Nelson in his recent Nation-wide radio address?"

House Passes Cut Farm Bill

Administration efforts to eliminate a committee ban on use of funds for marketing the Government's huge cotton, corn and wheat surpluses below parity.

Although the President has contended for the right to sell these stocks below parity to avoid inflation, the Senate already has passed a bill to stop such sales and the House followed suit on this appropriation bill. If the Senate adopts and tightens the House provision, the President may veto the bill.

Other successes by the farm bloc, despite nine days of siege by the economy drive, included defeat of an amendment to strike 20 million dollars from the 70-million-dollar rehabilitation loan program, rejection of an effort to cut down on the number of AAA county and township committeemen, and continuation of benefits to sugar farmers.

REA Wins and Loses

Alhough the House trimmed $263,798 from Administrative funds of the REA, Representative Faddis (Democrat), of Pennsylvania, failed, 87 to 49, in a move to deny use of funds for REA duplication of private transmission lines.

To Representative Mike Monroney (Democrat), of Oklahoma, came an eleventh-hour victory in a persistent fight to cut travel allowances for officials of the Agriculture Department.

Failing in previous efforts to cut individual travel items, he offered a new section to the bill limiting travel expenses under all Agriculture Department agencies to eight million dollars. Monroney said it would cut from one-third to a half amounts spent by employes on travel by train, plane, ship and private cars, as well as hotel and per diem expense allowances. His amendment was approved, 95 to 65.

Representative Tarver (Democrat), of Georgia, took the floor to oppose most of the cuts, particularly assailing the slash in travel allowances as "disastrous" to the farm program.

Ramspeck Gets Ovation

Monroney replied that it only meant Agriculture Department personnel "will be able to travel half as often, half as far and half as well."

At the close of debate, Chairman Cannon, of the Appropriations Committee, who lent a hand in some of the cutting, said the farmers will be willing to "make the slight adjustments required of them to put us in a position to win the war and the peace after the war." The House gave a standing ovation to Representative Ramspeck (Democrat), of Georgia, who presided during the long debate.

Farm bloc members predicted that many of the cuts will be restored in the Senate.

Rationing Decreed for Used Typewriters

The war agencies yesterday supplemented their order of a week ago "freezing" new typewriters by announcing plans for drastic rationing of used typewriters as well, making purchases possible in general only to vital war manufacturing plants.

At the same time, the Office of Price Administration set a temporary price ceiling for used machines and established top rentals.

The rationing program, which will go into effect April 15, will be administered by the local boards which are already in charge of tire and auto rationing.

The order placed no restrictions, other than the prices which may be charged, on typewriter rentals.

An order limiting the further manufacture of typewriters is expected from the War Production Board within a few days.

In other action, the OPA set temporary price ceilings at existing levels on finished piece goods made of cotton, rayon and their mixtures, which have recently had a "rapid and unwarranted" price rise.

The ceilings are at the wholesale levels, but are expected to prevent further rises in the price of many items made out of finished cloth, such as women's and children's dresses, women's suits, coats, housecoats, pajamas, men's shirts, curtains, drapery materials, etc.

The OPA warned that it did not believe the present prices, at which the ceilings were set, were "reasonable." On the contrary, it was indicated, they are "entirely too high," and a permanent order reducing the levels will probably be forthcoming.

Other developments yesterday in the WPB:

An order was issued instructing canners to lay aside for Government and military use from 15 to 33 per cent of this year's pack of major fruits and vegetables, and in certain products to increase the size of the pack by specified percentages which must be made available for Government purchase. The move was made to assure adequate supplies for the Army, Navy, Lend-Lease and other Government requirements, it was stated.

The WPB established strict priorities on all shipments from the continental United States to the Hawaiian Islands, in accordance with lists of essential military and civilian requirements.

Despite scrap iron shortages, fabrication of steel plates—principal short item in the steel industry and needed for the manufacture of ships, tanks and freight cars—established a new monthly record in February, the WPB announced. The shipments in the short month amounted to 785,723 tons, as compared to 754,522 in January. The March total is expected to exceed 800,000 tons.

Shipments of plate for merchant shipbuilding rose 15 per cent last month, it was stated. Delays in the merchant shipping program have been attributed in part to plate shortages.

$15,000 Present Gilds Birthday Of Navy Ace

Chicago, March 13 (AP).—Naval Air Lieut. Edward H. O'Hare, who became an ace of World War II last month when he was credited with a one-day bag of six Japanese bombing planes, had a birthday today—and a $15,000 present to go with it.

A decree was entered in circuit court declaring the 28-year-old flier to be the owner under a trust agreement of a half interest in $30,000 received from sale of a six-flat apartment building. The other half, the court found, belonged to O'Hare's father, the late Edward J. O'Hare, wealthy sportsman, who was mysteriously slain on a Chicago street in 1939.

Executors of the estate were ordered to turn over $15,000 from the sale to the son, and in his absence an attorney was designated to receive it.

Young O'Hare was born in St. Louis in 1914—when March 13 also fell on a Friday.

In his sermon tomorrow at 8 p. m. at Epiphany Episcopal Church the Rev. Dr. Charles W. Sheerin will try to state some of the reasons why people continue to believe with a very emphatic faith in the immortality of the soul.

At each service questions which have been asked by members of the congregation are answered and some of the questions which Dr. Sheerin will attempt to answer on Sunday night stated, "Is it scientifically possible to believe in the resurrection of the dead and is not the church clinging to an outworn dogma by continuing to claim its belief in immortality?"

"It seems almost sad," Dr. Sheerin stated, "that in these times of stress and war, when all families must expect to have someone included in the list of casualties, that so many people have lost a belief in immortality and future life. For almost 40 years so many people have lost connection with religion that a cynical sound of fatalism seems to be a permeating belief of most people."

Among the citations which comprise the lesson-sermon is the following from the Bible: "Through faith we understand that the worlds were framed by the word of God, so that things which are seen were not made of things which do appear." (Hebrews 11:3.)

St. Paul's Club Plans Book Tea

The Church Periodical Club of St. Paul's Church, Rock Creek Parish, will hold a book tea for the U. S. Naval Hospital on Wednesday from 3 to 6 p. m. in the Parish House.

There will be music by an orchestra from the U. S. Navy School of Music. Mrs. W. A. Admission will be by book.

10,000 Bibles Distributed

In a story concerning the Washington Bible Society appearing in last Monday's Post, it was inadvertently stated that 1000 Bibles, pocket Testaments and Bible portions were distributed during 1941. The figure should have been 10,000. The Post regrets the error.

Church of Scotland Leader Will Address Two Services

THE RIGHT REV. DR. JAMES HUTCHISON COCKBURN, minister of Dunblane Cathedral, Dunblane, Scotland, and moderator of the general assembly of the (Presbyterian) Church of Scotland

The Right Rev. James Hutchison Cockburn, Moderator of the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, will address two services here tomorrow.

He will speak at 11 a. m. at Covenant-First Presbyterian Church, Eighteenth and N Streets Northwest, as a feature of Membership Responsibility Sunday in the current Church Advance Program.

He will be heard at 4 p. m. at the Washington Cathedral, as the fourth guest preacher in a series of special "united services" sponsored by the Washington Cathedral and the Washington Federation of Churches.

Dr. Cockburn, who arrived in America by Atlantic clipper the middle of last month to engage in a six weeks' interdenominational speaking tour, is also Minister of Dunblane Cathedral, Dunblane, Scotland, and is chairman of the eastern section of the World Alliance of Presbyterian and Reformed Churches. His visit marks the first time in history that the Moderator of a Scottish Church has visited Washington during his term of office.

Dr. Cockburn was born at Paisley, Scotland, October 29, 1882. After attending Paisley grammar school he took his M. A. and B. D. degrees at Glasgow University, from which he also holds the honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity. His early ministries were at Mearns and at Battlefield Church, Glasgow.

In the First World War, the minister served in France with the Y. M. C. A. and as army chaplain in Egypt and East Africa. He is a member of the executive committee of the League of Nations Union and lecturer on pastoral theology at St. Andrew's University.

In his own church Dr. Cockburn has held the positions of vice-convener of the Committee on Religion Instruction of Youth, 1925-29; secretary of the Scottish Churches' Council, 1925-27; clerk of the Union Committee, 1927-29; convener of the Church and Nation Committee, 1929-35; clerk of the Committee on Restatement of the Church's Faith, 1930-35, and convener of the business committee of the General Assembly, 1936.

Bishop Freeman Visits St. John's Tomorrow

The Right Rev. James E. Freeman, Bishop of Washington, will visit St. John's Episcopal "Church of the Presidents," Lafayette Square, tomorrow at 11 a. m. to confirm a class of candidates and to preach. The choir of men and boys will sing Tallis' "If Ye Love Me," under the direction of Grover J. Oberle.

Clerics Start First-Aid Class Tuesday

Instructors' first-aid courses for the city's Protestant clergy will begin Tuesday in the library of the Federation of Churches' Building, 1751 N Street Northwest, continuing on Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays from 1 to 3 p. m. for a five-week period, it was announced yesterday by Dr. Worth M. Tippy, acting federation executive secretary. He explained that most of the ministers found the afternoon hour more desirable than the morning for the course. Armbands, passes, car stickers and other emergency equipment for regular ministers and their assistants are available at the Federation Building.

All Protestant clergymen are invited to enroll in the course, whether or not their churches are affiliated with the federation. Rabbis also are welcome. Because many Protestant clerics were unable to attend the recent meeting of Protestant ministers with civilian defense officials, another meeting is being arranged, to which rabbis also are being invited. Catholic priests met with defense officials several weeks ago.

"FLING OUT THE BANNER, LET IT FLOAT"
- - - GEORGE W. DOANE - - -
Fling out the banner! let it float
Skyward and seaward, high and wide;
The sun that lights its shining folds,
The Cross on which the Saviour died!
Little Stories of GREAT HYMNS
This ringing trumpet call, pulsating with a vigorous spirit of heroism, was written for a flag-raising ceremony of a girls' school. The banner figure was inspired by the passage from Psalms, "Thou hast given a banner to them that fear Thee, that it may be displayed because of the truth."

Marriage Soon Will Unite Two Young Church Workers

GROVER L. HARTMAN

ANNABEL SPANGLE

A romance that blossomed amid Methodist young people's activities soon will culminate in the marriage of two of Washington's most popular young church workers.

They are Grover L. Hartman, director of the Federation of Churches' Defense Commission, and president of the Foundry Methodist Foundry Forge, and Miss Annabel Spangle, director of Christian education at Hamline Methodist Church and "big sister" to hundreds of Methodist intermediate boys and girls in Washington.

Their engagement recently was announced but no formal date has been set for the wedding.

Miss Spangle is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Spangle, of Fort Lauderdale, Fla. She was born in Milford, Ill., attending schools of Milford and Danville until the family moved to Florida. She was graduated from Fort Lauderdale High School.

While attending Tennessee Wesleyan Junior College at Athens, Tenn., she was salutatorian of the graduating class and active in all phases of campus life. She received her A. B. degree from American University in 1937.

She has been connected with Hamline Church five years, and also has been on the staff of the Baltimore Methodist Conference summer training school and the interdenominational youth conference at Westminster, Md.

Mr. Hartman is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Ben Hartman, of Brookston, Ind., and is a graduate of Brookston High School and De Pauw University. As a recognition of his outstanding campus work at De Pauw, where he was valedictorian in the class of '35, he received the Albert J. Beveridge fellowship for graduate study at American University, where he received his master's degree in 1936.

He has been chairman of the social studies and government department at Sidwell Friends' School, and last January was named to the defense commission of the federation as liaison man between the Protestant churches and service men and newcomers.

Sale Refused At Ceiling Price, U. S. Seizes Scrap

Valparaiso, Ind., March 13 (AP).—One hundred tons of scrap metal at Frank Schumak's junk yard were requisitioned by the Government today in what a Federal official said was the first seizure action of its kind in the Nation.

Donald S. Cummings, Indiana field representative of the War Production Board's automobile graveyard section, headed the requisition party.

Cummings said Schumak refused to sell his scrap to steel mill buyers at the ceiling price set by the Office of Price Administration and had been holding out for a premium of more than $3 a ton.

Schumak offered no resistance when ten trucks rolled into his yard and workmen began loading the scrap. The metal was purchased by the Metals Reserve Co., a Government corporation set up to purchase metals needed in war production.

Cummings said Schumak would be paid the prevailing ceiling price of $18.75 a ton.

Shocking Slums

There is profound irony in the reaction of Congressmen to the realistic picture of conditions in Washington's slums as presented at Thursday's hearing before the Public Buildings and Grounds Committee. Several legislators were amazed to learn that the Capital City has large pockets of rotten housing with vermin-infested walls, leaky roofs, broken floors, and no sanitary plumbing. Others were obviously shocked to discover that such conditions exist within a few blocks of the Capitol grounds. Why has this grave menace to health been allowed to remain unchallenged for so many years? Why has not Congress been informed? What can be done about it? These and similar questions from the lips of Congressmen leave us even more amazed than they are.

The significant fact is, of course, that this amazement was expressed by members of Washington's city council. Here is a group of legislators who have a very direct responsibility for governing the Capital City. Many of them have been told again and again about the horror of Washington's slums. But apparently the majority have never realized what pitiful degradation is to be found in some of the shacks that have an entire family in every room with no plumbing facilities. Their lack of information on a subject so vital to the welfare of this large and growing community dramatizes, perhaps better than anything else could, the gravity of the handicap under which government in Washington operates.

The desire of Congressmen to put out of use all insanitary hovels that are now breeding grounds for crime and disease in Washington will be greatly appreciated by the local community. But it is not a simple matter to wipe out insanitary conditions, short of destroying the slums themselves. Certainly Representative Hebert's suggestion that District landlords be forced to install modern plumbing before their houses can be rented is thoroughly impractical. Its effect would be to drive thousands of families into the streets with no roofs whatsoever over their heads. Slums which are permitted to develop over a period of many years simply cannot be cleaned up in a day, particularly in wartime.

But there is something Congress can do about it. Whether or not it approves the Goodwillie plan to rebuild nine blocks in the Southwest for the housing of warworkers, it can adopt a modern housing code that within a specified period would require minimum standards of decency in housing. Fortunately such a code has already been worked out by the Washington Housing Association. All Congress needs to do is to direct the Commissioners to put such a code into effect. The really shocking fact about the District's slum holes is that our governing body has never taken the trouble to pass legislation that would force a clean-up.

Play's The Thing

Some of our readers may recall that a few weeks ago, at the time of the short-lived appointment of Miss Mayris Chaney as "directress of children's activities in physical fitness," we suggested that some further appointments in the Office of Civilian Defense seemed desirable, including directresses of flower arrangement, hobby culture, bluebird-song writing, quiz programs, book discussion clubs, and so on. Apparently other and more influential intellects were occupying themselves with similarly farsighted ideas. Anyway, we have it now from Senator Byrd that the OCD will include coordinators of bowling, of badminton, archery, bag punching, billiards, canoeing, code ball, paddle ball, miniature golf and weight lifting and marbles. All in all, says Senator Byrd, there are already 69 of these sports coordinators, thanks to the indefatigable Mr. John B. Kelly.

It will be observed that our ideas for mobilizing the civilian populace tended, like Mrs. Roosevelt's, toward the organization of esthetic and intellectual pursuits, while Mr. Kelly's run toward the muscular. However, we are not disposed to raise any petty quibbles on this point. The important thing is to keep people from getting bored to death with the war, especially in moments of danger. So we have only one complaint and that is about this apparent intention to include archery in the civilian defense program. Archery sounds like an altogether too warlike occupation to be encouraged at this time. Certainly the shooting of real bullets would come into this category, so maybe it is just as well that Mr. C. R. Lister, the coordinator of rifle shooting, is "burned up" about the whole business and, according to his own statement, is ready to quit.

End The Scramble

Too little and too late is an epitaph which may have equal applicability to our economic and to our military policy. We have had too little price control. With only a part of the price system under control, the remainder is now the scene of a wild scramble, particularly between the farm bloc and the labor lobbyists. The increase in the cost of living shows the result, an increase which has been sufficiently rapid of late weeks to be called inflationary. But the spectacle has not stopped the scramble. The farm bloc has again irrupted in revolt for higher prices. That will doubtless be followed by renewed wage demands, and the spiral, if not arrested, will one day be so rapid that it will be too late to stop it.

Inexorably, therefore, the Administration, having a responsibility toward the dollar as an insurance of social and economic balance, is being driven into a position which calls for all-in price control. All-in price control would include farm prices and wages—everything, in fact, that contributes to the general price structure. The spur came from the farm bloc's revolt. It is said that this exhibition has turned White House attention to the Canadian system for a precedent. About this system there is a good deal of misunderstanding. Perhaps the use of the word ceiling as applied to Canadian controls is responsible for it. In fact, the Canadian system is not as rigid as it sounds. As to all prices, wages included, the burden of proof is put upon those who wish to change them. There can be no alteration in basic wage rates without official permission, and, where an advance is made, the advance is regarded as a bonus. That is economic statesmanship. If the bonus system had been in vogue in this country in 1940, the United States would have been saved from the readjustment which the end of warmaking will make inevitable. But that is now water over the dam. If a similar set of controls could now be put into effect, we might arrest the spiral which is beginning to alarm the Administration.

If this country cannot afford the results of the present scramble, likewise it cannot afford the time spent in it. All-in price control would conserve the energy of the pressure groups and redirect that energy into the war effort. It is human nature to compete for favors when favors are available. If the favors were withdrawn, then there would be no scramble. In short, politics would have to be adjourned for the duration because the stuff of most of our politics in the last decade would be withdrawn. The gain to national unity and national effort would be considerable when the American people saw their Capital permeated without qualification with the national interest.

Southward Ho!

Premier Tojo's "stand and deliver" broadcast to Australia suggests that a Japanese invasion of the Australian continent may not be far off. Even before then the air and sea battles in the vicinity of New Guinea pointed to that likelihood. After landing troops at Salamaua and other points on the Australian-occupied New Guinea coast (the western half of that large island is held by the Dutch), the enemy has begun to carry out large-scale and persistent aerial raids on Port Moresby. That is only 335 miles across the Gulf of Papua from the northernmost tip of Australia at Cape York. It is now reported that a great Japanese invasion fleet is on its way to Port Moresby, presumably with the idea of effecting a landing. Port Moresby can, in turn, serve as a base of operations for an actual invasion of the Australian mainland.

Unless the attrition of Japanese air and sea power by United Nations bombers and naval craft is great enough to cripple the enemy in that corner of the southwest Pacific, a Japanese landing somewhere on the coast of North Australia would have a far better than even chance of success.

But invasion is one thing, and invasion with a view to conquest is another. There are some shrewd observers who dismiss as fantastic any idea that the invaders would attempt anything as ambitious as the conquest of all of Australia. Japan's sea, air and land forces, it is pointed out, are far from unlimited. Their supply lines are long. And to extend them as far as, say, Sydney would mean doubling the distance the Japanese would have to go from their home base to the theater of war. Furthermore, Australia, unlike Malaya, Burma and the Dutch East Indies, does not suffer from the great disadvantage of being a colonial area, with the population only passively participating in the defense of their home territory. Every man, woman and child in Australia is being mobilized for the war effort and, regardless of the sparseness of the Australian population in relation to the vast area they inhabit, they would certainly give the invaders a very hot reception. There is certainly no questioning their determination to leave nothing but scorched earth in the path of the enemy in places where he cannot be driven off. Moreover, their strength and fighting power are steadily being reinforced by shipments of men and planes and munitions from the United States and Great Britain. Australia, in other words, might turn out to be another China, and by this time doubtless Premier Tojo's call upon the Australians to yield has been received with many a bronx cheer "down under."

Unless, therefore, the Japanese are drunk with their victories (so far their policy, while full of risks, has nonetheless been one of cool calculation) we may expect them to limit their invasion of Australia for the time being to the acquisition of beachheads and air bases. With Port Darwin in enemy hands, for instance, the offensive which the United Nations plan to wage against the Japanese would have to be carried out from bases at least 1500 miles farther to the south. At the same time the Japanese would be in a position to flank the sea route over which reinforcements are now reaching Australia.

Message To India

Whatever message Sir Stafford Cripps is carrying to India, such an emissary should be a guaranty to the people of India that the British are prepared to go a long way to satisfy Indian nationalism. There can be no question of Sir Stafford's good faith. He has long been a friend to Indian nationalism. Yet the problem is far from simple, though that is the general impression among the American people. What has hitherto stood in the way of complete independence for India is the disunity in India quite as much as the reluctance of the British government to grant independence.

Consider the extraordinary complexity of the problem in that subcontinent. Only part of India is directly under the British government, and in that part there live one-quarter Moslem and three-quarters Hindus. The rest of India—and it is a little less than half—is split into no fewer than 562 separate states under the rule of the Indian princes. Such a situation makes up a hydra-headed difficulty. Naturally the princes are not anxious to give up their fiefs, while there is no indication as yet of any Hindu-Moslem plan for the governance of India.

In point of fact, the British have been getting out of India at a fast rate, literally as well as politically. Far from being overrun by British officials, the number in India is exactly 573. That shows the extent to which the administration of India has come more and more into Indian hands. Even the Executive Council, which is the Viceroy's Cabinet for British India, has a preponderance of Indian members. They now number eight, as against four Britons. Of course, those Indians are not representative of the Hindu All-India Congress or the Moslem League, but that can hardly be blamed upon the British.

The British, moreover, long have anticipated dominion status for India—that is, a role similar to that enjoyed by Canada. In October, 1939, they made a declaration to that effect. The times have hastened a desire to fulfill the pledge, and fulfillment means that India should be responsible for its own defense and its own foreign relations. Those are the two powers which the British still keep from India. Maybe the British have not hitherto been in earnest in their assurances that one day these powers will be liquidated, but, aside from the nomination of Sir Stafford Cripps as an emissary, there can be no such question nowadays. Yet the new British aspiration to satisfy India must be related to the healing of India's own schisms before India can enjoy real independence.

School Hours

Traffic Director Van Duzer's plan to relieve traffic congestion by changing school hours seems worth trying. Under the plan schools would open a half hour later and close a half hour later, thus releasing between 75 and 80 buses during the early morning rush to ever-increasing loads of warworkers. Parents are about equally divided on the question, according to a poll now being conducted. However, those who oppose the new schedule have admitted they oppose it because it would be inconvenient. The war, unfortunately, has obliged us to realize that convenience must not weigh against war necessity. Private means of transport are speedily being curtailed, but our local population needing transport is still increasing. The local transit companies are unable to get more carriers quickly enough to cover the deficiency because these carriers are simply not available for purchase. If changing the school hours can help, in this predicament, the hours should be changed, at least for the duration.

I have known sorrow like a breaking wave
Sweep over me from out the open sea . . .
O my beloved! sorrow was the grave
Wherein you lay, and hid your face from me!
Yet the spent wave, returning to the deep,
Wreathes the white feet of Beauty as it goes,
And from the new-turned earth green seedlings creep,
And blossom into many a scented rose.
Ocean's not tideless, earth's not barren loam—
Shall I be less than these from which I spring?
O let me in resurgent ebb then come
Returning, to the source of everything,
And when the tides no longer beat the shore,
And earth is dead, sorrow shall be no more.

Jars For Canning

Women everywhere are urged to can more to help provide for those who may have to be evacuated from coastal towns and defense areas. Now most of us have sufficient containers, etc., for our own family use, but surplus canning will prove to be very expensive, and far beyond what lots of us can afford as we wouldn't get our jars back. The majority of farmers have surplus garden stuff that goes to waste every year, and that stuff could very well be put up for this emergency if we had the cans.

The people who live in large cities never think of canning, preserving or making relishes, and the glass jars in which they buy salad dressing, mayonnaise, peanut butter, mustard, pickles, apple butter, etc., are thrown in the trash by the thousands. I know, because I lived in the city for 18 years. All these jars in quart and pint size can be used in canning and preserving. I have over 200 that I use year after year, by using regular jar tops.

If there could be a drive organized by the Red Cross asking people to save these jars, and have them distributed to local Red Cross chapters, of which there is one in every town of any size, and that local chapter in turn could distribute them or have folks call for them by appealing over local radio stations, I'm sure there would be unlimited cooperation. It would be cheaper than buying food for the evacuees outright.

Freight trucking concerns might even distribute to local Red Cross chapters free of charge as a patriotic gesture. MRS. ALLEN GOONTZ.

Trials Of The Little Oil Man

At the present writing the oil situation looks darker than it has looked in 50 years for the small producer.

The price of gasoline is being reduced and the sales are being gradually cut down to such an extent that the oil transportation companies are disconnecting from various producing areas and not buying the oil, creating an alarm which has never before occurred.

Why? Mr. Ickes recently ruled that not more than one well could be drilled on every 40 acres held. That in itself is ruination to the little fellow, but plays right into the hands of the major companies.

Who pioneers the oil country and wild cats? Certainly not the major oil companies. They sit back and let the independent operators do all of the discovery work and either buy them out when production is discovered or force them out through banks they either own or control in this country. There never has been an oil pool discovered by a major oil company in the history of this country—the Smackover in Arkansas, Seminole and Osage in Oklahoma, East Texas, Signal Hill in California and many others, including the Luling field in Texas, were all discovered by independent oil operators, later taken over by the major companies, either through purchase or freeze-out.

Oil is one of the essential products that will win this war, and what does the swivel chair brigade in Washington do? It shuts us off from all material necessary for further development work. No pipe, pumps, tanks, casing, pumping rods and many other items necessary to drill a well. Then they restrict the drilling to one well to every 40 acres.

No independent operator or small company can afford such a risk. The risks are greater in the oil business as it is, than in any other business that I know anything about. That is why so many of us go broke time and time again and have to make a fresh start.

The ordinary procedure for the small operator is to get together a block of acreage; have some surface and subsurface geology worked out and, if there is a reasonable chance of getting oil, go out to raise the money to drill. This is usually done by pooling interests with other small operators and jointly drilling a test well, which is very costly. If it's a dry hole it's just too bad, and the loss is forgotten, but if a producer comes in we usually run to the bank and borrow enough money to drill an offset immediately. In order to get this loan we have to give a mortgage on the entire property; assign all oil runs to the bank until the loan has been repaid; personally indorse the note—in other words, give up our guts to get the loan. Now mind you all of the banks in the oil country are owned or controlled by the major oil companies or through their dummies.

If anything goes wrong with the second well, the bank immediately calls the loan, knowing it can't be paid. They foreclose on the property and sell it to the highest bidder (another dummy) and it winds up in the folds of one of the major oil companies. That is only one of the things the little fellow is up against.

Now they force us through legislation to hire three crews of labor on a well that is drilling instead of two. The drillers and roustabouts don't like it any more than we, as they make more money working a 12-hour shift. They usually live out on a lease while drilling operations are being carried on, so hours mean nothing to them. It's the money that counts, and under the New Deal they make less than they ever did, and that kind of work is not steady by a long shot.

We have also suffered with the higher cost of material and no increase in the price of oil. Price raising was tabooed by Washington. None of the major companies would take the initiative to increase the price of oil for fear of indictment, so there has been no increase and there will be none until the Government wakes up and puts some real honest-to-God oil men in authority in Washington, when the shortage of oil is felt, not before. This will not be so far in the offing, and then watch them howl, like they are doing now about rubber.

Due to the orders for curtailment of production, cutting of the price of gasoline, restrictions on drilling and the refusal of some of the oil transportation companies to buy any more oil, the business is in a chaotic state, and the banks are beginning to call loans. This means absolute ruination for a great many small companies and independent operators. As I said before, they are the backbone of the oil business; they are the real producers.

What's going to be done about it? Nothing until it's too late. The attitude of the Administration is to hell with the little business man. Let him switch into some other line.

Steel Plate Substitutes

The public discussions of Production Director Mr. W. H. Harrison, and of his chief, Donald Nelson, regarding the inadequacy of our shipbuilding program, bring us squarely up to the question of whether everything has been done to design and build ships without using steel plates, the shortage of which is responsible for the delay.

We know that the Emergency Fleet Corporation during the last war built both wooden and reinforced concrete ships, after making extensive tests. Wooden ships were a complete failure. The concrete ships displayed liabilities as well as assets. They were seaworthy, but not economical. They were heavy, cumbersome and difficult of navigation. Beyond that, however, they did their job—making numerous crossings in perfect safety.

Allowance should be made for the comparative youth of the reinforced concrete industry in 1917. Since that time, great strides have been made. Prestressing of concrete, to give just one instance, brought to the attention of American engineers in 1934 by Admiral Moreell, makes possible the production of concrete slabs as elastic as steel plates, and reduces the amount of reinforcing steel to less than one-fourth of the amount previously required. In 1917, due to our meager knowledge, the reinforcing steel required in a concrete boat was over one-half the amount of steel plates and members used in all-steel construction of ships of the same carrying capacity.

By taking advantage of the latest research in reinforced concrete, the drawbacks of the last emergency shipbuilding period should be mitigated, if not entirely overcome.

It is by no means certain that concrete is the best material available as a wartime substitute for steel plates, but with the experience we have now had it appears to be. It can certainly be used without any drawbacks in the construction of floating docks and gates which now consume many ten thousands of tons of plates. The Germans and Japanese are both said to be using concrete extensively in marine construction.

A study of steel plate substitutes should not stop at concrete, however. The building materials industry presents a variety of products which with the application of a little vision and engineering ingenuity could be incorporated into shipbuilding, particularly for smaller craft, lighters, inland ships, etc., which all would save plates for the master program. There are, for example, many lightweight steel members in the market which could be cleverly combined with plywood, terra cotta, asbestos or membranes of concrete to perform the same job as the heavy plates. If we were serious about it, within a few months, sample specimens of alternative construction could be in operation. After that there would still be time to profit from this study, and the advisability of the use of such materials in larger ships could be considered.

War Or Duel?

Why not pick an uninhabted desert island somewhere way off and send there Mussolini, Hitler, Stalin, Yamashita, Churchill and Roosevelt and let them fight it out.

Lobsterman

It was 14 years ago on the Brant Rock shore of Massachusetts that I met Allie Sargeant Taylor, the lobsterman. His long face was lined and leathery from 30 years of fighting the sea and he was the most taciturn man I have ever known. Yet, I learned a lot from Allie, things about the sea that no school could ever teach. When the rest of the young crowd would be playing handball on the beach I would be tagging after Allie, over at the back harbor.

To me there was something incurably exciting about that little harbor; the memory of it is all mixed up with a wind-blown sky, the murmur of surf on the outside beach, the pungent smell of oakum and new rope, of salt marsh lands, and the gentle, persistent way the boats tugged at their moorings with the pull of the tide.

Sometimes Allie permitted me to help with the bait work. Lobsters, scavengers of the ocean bottom like sea gulls on the surface, eat refuse, mostly decayed. The best bait was fish, ripened by a day in the sun. When it became soft and powerfully odorous we rolled pound chunks in short pieces of burlap, tying the package together with manila string.

Lobster traps measure about a yard long and two feet high, being constructed of wooden laths over formers, latticework fashion. A funnel-shaped netting leads in from one end, ramplike, to a wooden stake to which is tied the burlap-wrapped rotten fish. Traps are weighted with a stone to keep them on the ocean bottom, anywhere from 30 to 70 feet down. A half inch rope leads from the trap to the surface where it is attached to a painted buoy with the owner's initials branded into the wood.

Allie had 60 traps out between Plymouth Harbor and Scituate Light. Starting at dawn it took until noon to service them all. We'd swing alongside, throttle down, and lift the buoy from the water. Allie would swing the boat in a slow, tight circle while he hooked a loop of the rope through a pulley hanging from an iron pipe bent overside like a question mark. Then he'd pull enough slack in to throw a loop over the outside spinning flywheel of the motor which automatically wound up the rope, hauling the trap to the surface and onto the overhang board. It took five minutes to remove one or two angry reddish-green lobsters, throw back a half dozen crabs, and rebait. Then he'd let the trap slide back into the water, throwing the loose coils of rope and buoy after it.

Allie was a rugged individualist. He carried a rifle in the boat and when I asked him about it he sliced off a fresh chew and proceeded to soften it up before answering.

"Fellers who steal cattle get hung," he explained. "Waal some 'uv that breed are workin' the sea. I been losin' plenty, seems like. An' if I c'n lay my rifle sights down on the dirty Portagee whose stealin' my catch, I'll kill 'em!"

On occasions Allie had pointed out several long, rakish cruisers, dirty gray in color, moving slowly back and forth beyond the 12 mile limit. They were the rum fleet of prohibition. After Allie discovered it was their crews who were stealing his lobsters he hated their guts.

In July it got so bad Allie made hardly any profit at all. He was furious and almost ready to work the rum fleet over with his rifle when I asked him a simple question one foggy morning during a haul off Scituate Light. I'd noticed a line of strange lobster buoys parallel to ours and I pointed them out to Allie.

"How come they're not painted?" I asked him.

"Paints most likely washed off," Allie snapped; but a funny look suddenly crossed his face and he swung the wheel hard over. We pulled up alongside one of the unmarked buoys and hooked it in. There were no initials branded on it. Allie swung the loop through the pulley and over the flywheel and started to haul.

The trap was heavy and when it showed on the surface I helped Allie lift it onto the overhang. It looked like a regular trap only the net opening was boarded up. Inside there was a wooden case holding 12 straw-wrapped bottles: Champagne! We realized, then, that the rum fleet had been dropping their loads in fake lobster traps for certain "fishermen" to haul in and deliver.

I was too excited to speak. I watched Allie's jaws work rhythmically until he let a long stream of tobacco juice slither into the sea.

"I ain't no bootlegger," Allie told me, "but I ain't no hypocrite, neither. No law kin touch me for takin' this; only fer sellin' it. An' I know where I c'n sell it safe. Besides, I'll only be takin' back what they stole from me." (It amounted to more than that but Allie was never a one to split hairs.)

There were six other unmarked buoys and we hauled them all. There was a full case in each. Allie sold the lot for $130 a case—the best fishing of the summer. He gave $200 to the little white church behind the harbor for repairs, and banked the rest, with the exception of the money he spent for a new rifle. But he never had to use it because his traps were never bothered again.

Technocracy Ad

I was turning the pages of The Post, just easy-like, to see what followed "the termination of the illumination," when all of a sudden I ran into this full page by the Technocrats. Well, sir, you could have knocked me over with a tank. It said they had the only plan to win the war, because they are engineers. The politicians had failed, business had failed — and to straighten the whole mess out, why, the Government should just take over the works, lock, stock and barrel (that's a gun).

Say, who is this "Government," anyhow? Will somebody please resume the illumination? Or is that necessary? WORRYCRAT.

Today And Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

Something Off My Chest

IF THERE is anyone who thinks the Government's publicity is successful, I have not happened to meet him. Indeed it is fair to say that, far from earning public confidence, the elaborate and costly publicity offices are managing to get themselves disliked and distrusted. I venture to believe that the rapidly mounting irritation with the public relations experts is due to the fact that they operate on a theory which is inherently insincere, and that, as the temper of the people hardens because they face the issues of life and death, they find this insincerity more and more repellent.

LIPPMANN

The profession of publicity experts is a new one. Its forerunners were, I suppose, P. T. Barnum and the theatrical press agents of our age of innocence. But in its modern, serious, respectable, elaborately organized, and "scientific" form, the profession of publicity expert has developed in the past 30-odd years. He "sells" ideas, and unfortunately he has succeeded in selling the idea to public men that they can hire publicity experts to sell them and their actions to the public. I call this conception of publicity inherently insincere because it assumes that the public aspect of a person can be fabricated by men who have specialized in the art of manipulating public opinion. Along with so many other things that were shoddy, this notion of public relations flourished in that interval between the two wars when the people were unwilling to face the first and last things of human existence. This notion is now being burned up in the fires of war. For when free men and women stake their lives, their fortunes, and their dearest hopes in their country's cause, they will not stomach a fabricated, manipulated, synthetic public mask covering the faces of their leaders.

THE CORE of the matter can best be examined by considering the employment of professional writers to prepare speeches for high officials to deliver. No one is concerned about the men who prepare information from Government departments in a convenient form for publication. The real question arises only when they prepare important addresses in which the people are supposed to hear directly from a responsible leader what he thinks and why he does what he does.

Therefore, to be specific and quite frank because the leadership of the President himself is involved, let us consider the extraordinary, and, to my old-fashioned mind, the astounding thing that now happens when the announcement is made that the President will deliver an important address. The papers report that a number of professional writers, men not responsible for shaping or carrying out the policies he will discuss, are gathering at the White House to write the words which the President will utter.

IT WILL be said that all Presidents, and indeed all public men, are assisted by others in preparing their addresses. That is true. And it is entirely necessary and proper. But there is this great difference between the new procedure at the White House and that which was employed by Mr. Roosevelt himself in the earlier days, in the days of the brains trust. Whatever one may think of the brains trust, they were a group of men actively and continually at work in the shaping of policy. They were not a group of ghost writers lacking first-hand knowledge of and personal responsibility for the things they helped the President put into words. And that, I am profoundly convinced, is a principal reason why the earlier speeches of the President were less rhetorical but far more effective, having then—what in recent times they have lacked—the feeling of action rather than of literary comment and special pleading.

The address of a President should be an event and not a lecture or a public reading, and the decision about when he should speak and what needs saying can be wisely made, not by supposed experts on public opinion but only by men participating in the action he is going to talk about. There is all the difference in the world between being assisted by his official family and being assisted by ghost writers. The artists who now help the President with his speeches ought to be the first to understand this, that authentic words are not like a coat of paint sprayed on a building that someone else has built. "The style is the man himself." The style of the President's recent speeches has been the style of men brought in from the outside who know only by hearsay, not by their own acts, what the Government is doing. It does not require training as a literary critic for the people to feel this and to be put off by it. There is in most men, as indeed in children, and even in animals, an instinctive sense of the real and the phony when they are spoken to.

THE VICE of the new publicity expert and ghost writer system in public life is that it proceeds to create a synthetic public man in front of the actual public man. And since the public is increasingly aware of this system and of how it operates, the system destroys the bonds of confidence between leaders and the people. The actual man is no longer face to face with the people. He wears a disguise which has been contrived for him. This masquerade will not work in serious times among a free people, who are curious, inquisitive, and quickly repelled if they feel they are being fooled.

A public man can and needs to be supplied with material and advice and criticism in preparing an important address. But no one can write an authentic speech for another man; it is as impossible as writing his love letters for him or saying his prayers for him. When he speaks to the people, he and not someone else must speak. For it is much more important that he should be genuine, and it is infinitely more persuasive, than that he be bright, clever, ingenious, entertaining, eloquent, or even grammatical. It is moreover a delusion, fostered into an inferiority complex among executives by professional writers, that in an age of specialists some are called to act and some are called to find the right words for men of action to use. The truth is that anyone who knows what he is doing can say what he is doing, and any one who knows what he thinks can say what he thinks. Those who cannot speak for themselves are, with very rare exceptions, not very sure of what they are doing and of what they mean. The sooner they are found out the better.

THE CURRENT publicity system fails also because the public relations experts inevitably give their clients bad advice about public relations. Believing that words can sell ideas, being themselves separated from the business of action, they usually miss the essential point about effective public utterance. It is that in public affairs words are effective only as they are part of an action. The whole effect of words is lost, and the value of public speech debased, if nothing happens, except an analysis of the fan mail, when the public man speaks.

Thus, for example, the President's speech of last May would have been a highly effective speech if, when he concluded by declaring an unlimited national emergency, he had then put into effect the measures of an unlimited emergency. But because he used the momentous words and then no momentous action followed, he was very badly advised to use the big words. For the after-effect was that the big exciting words were a mere literary fancy, the rhetoric of ghost writers, and the speech went flat like a pricked balloon.

THIS CRITICAL POINT—that in a public man words must not be words but must be married to his acts—might well be considered by Mr. Donald Nelson. He is delivering a large number of public speeches which, if he writes them himself, must take a lot of his time. They are good speeches in their spirit and their purpose. But I venture to suggest that Mr. Nelson will be far more effective if he does not divorce his speeches from his acts—if, that is to say, he does not make speeches which are just speeches and does not issue his orders without speaking about them.

The effective time for him to speak is when he is acting, so that whenever he says something the public will know that something is going to happen, so that whenever he acts—say to deprive the people of something—they will hear directly from him why he has acted.

IS THAT not what any sensible man does in private life? It will work just as well in public life.

Nehru's Prophecy

By Eric Estorick

Indian Independence

WHEN JAWAHARLAL Nehru visited England in 1936, it was inevitable that India should be the subject of his talks with British political leaders. The reactions which he received to discussions of India's problems and her future were, he has said, natural and not difficult to understand. But "it was not the intricacy of the problem that was baffling," he later wrote, "for it was simple enough in its essence, but the fact that any effective solution inevitably came up against the whole structure of British political and economic life, and the complex of ideas and long-cherished prejudices which the British people have held in regard to India. To solve the problem meant the knocking out of the bottom of that structure and the smothering of those ancient ideas and prejudices. It meant the ending of the imperialist tradition and the winding up of the empire."

To the terrible poverty of India, the vast unemployment amongst all classes, the problems of land and industry, the continuing repression and denial of civil liberty—to these questions the normal Conservative reaction, Nehru continued, was simple enough and its simplicity gave it an air of romance. "They had few doubts or difficulties," said Nehru, "no complexes over India . . . the British Empire to them was good, very good and beneficial to all concerned, and bound to endure. Unhappily it was surrounded by evil elements, full of spite and jealousy, who create difficulties in the smooth-working of this ideal institution. If these objectionable elements could be made to see straight or to be suppressed, all would be well."

The attitudes of the Liberals were similar, but while they "were troubled more at what was happening in India, vague fears of the future prevented them from enjoying the calm and peaceful contemplation which might otherwise have been theirs. Bred up in traditions of civil liberty and democracy, they felt a little uneasy at the ruthless suppression in India of much that they had valued in England and for Europe . . . As for democracy, were there not substantial beginnings of it in the India Act with its wider franchise, and safeguards and special powers?"

THERE WERE many individuals in the Labor movement who believed that imperialism was a barrier to all real progress both in India and England "but for the Labor Party as a whole there was no such realization, and even when an uncomfortable feeling came that some such fundamental change was inevitable, it was sternly suppressed, and as practical men and women they faced the problem of the next Labor government. With all their dislike for it they moved in the orbit of imperialism and felt powerless to step out it . . . The Labor Party has moved to the right in recent years; the drift is likely to continue. Even in earlier days its record on India was indistinguishable from that of other parties and governments, and it gathered to itself the deep distrust of the Indian people. It will not be easy to remove this and, even with all the good will that many of its members undoubtedly possess for India, it can hardly do much to retain the confidence of the Indian people, unless it moves out of the circle that closes round it and makes it afraid of its own professions."

As if anticipating his own—and labor's—immediate future, Nehru concluded: "A Labor government may come sometime in the future and much is likely to happen in India before then. Even when it comes, it will be nervous and lacking confidence in itself, it will be afraid of all manner of vested interests, and the House of Lords will be there to see that it behaves. Only international catastrophes and major events in India or elsewhere will shake it out of its lethargy."

Nehru has lived to witness the "international catastrophes" and "major events" which have shaken not only the Labor Party out of its traditional lethargy but the democracies of the entire world as well. Indeed, shortly after Nehru was freed from a provincial Indian jail in early December, 1941, to which he had been imprisoned for expressing dangerous beliefs, he became leader of the Indian Nationalist Congress. Able, once again, to state India's case—from a vantage point immeasurably stronger than at any time previously—Nehru has demanded that Britain display in her colonial relations the faith and courage which is bespoken in Allied resistance to Axis militarism.

No longer is Indian freedom a possible subject for academic discussion by a British Labor government. Neither Conservative indifference nor Liberal daydreaming are the order of this day. Fate and the Japanese military machine have seen to that. The antique props of British colonial administration have been knocked from under and all England calls for a change.

The Labor Party, surprisingly, demands that India be given guarantees of independance immediately. The Churchill government declares that the subject will be resolved shortly as a result of Sir Stafford Cripps' mission to India.

But the enormity of the situation remains.

Nehru's critical observations concerning British opinion on India remain substantially uncontradicted. Churchill has given little indication that he regards India today any less the prize jewel in the Royal Crown. The continuance in office of Churchill's friend, Leopold Amery, as secretary of state for Burma and India attest to that. The recent visit to India of Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek was viewed in some quarters as an effort to put the Indian Nationalist Congress on the spot. It appeared as though the leader of a foreign country, contiguous to India, and a partner sharing the common dangers of Japanese aggression, had come to India in order to liquidate the recalcitrance of the Indian Nationalist Congress. Actually, the Generalissimo's visit had the opposite effect. The congress leaders were friendly and took China's leader into their confidence. Their case became known to him in unmistakable terms. After lengthy conversations with Nehru and Ghandi, Chiang Kai-shek met Jinnah, Moslem leader and fiery opponent of the Congress Party. While the results of this meeting are as yet unknown, Jinnah's demands that the British recognize that Pakistan aims be recognized as legitimate—ethnic and geographic independance bordering on Pan Islamism—continue unabated.

JINNAH'S stubbornness, which is holding up a satisfactory solution to the problem, is an unfortunate result of British colonial policy whose bankruptcy was made so clear in Malaya. For many years, successive British governments have laid the inability to solve the Indian question to alleged Hindu indifference to Moslem demands. The fact that the Hindu population was triple that of the Moslems, a minority whose integrity the British felt they must protect, was viewed with alarm. Despite the fact that the Indian Moslems were traditionally militaristic, while the Hindus were passive resisters abhorring violence, the Moslems had to be protected. Practically, however, the Moslem League, representing ostensibly India's Moslems, became the wedge whereby a minimum of friction could always be maintained to insure an "unstable" situation in India which only the continued overlordship of Britain could preserve from flaring into open conflict. Jinnah, as leader of the Moslem League, which no longer receives the support of the British government to perform these split functions, has now decided to play the game of hard-to-get. He has not declared his support for Britain, nor has he attacked Japanese aggression. The Indian Nationalist Congress has declared for the Allies as against the Axis. Can Jinnah temporize much longer? Would he desert like Bose, former Indian leader in Bengal who has gone over to the Japanese, if he had the opportunity?

These questions insinuate themselves into the forefront of the impending mission of Sir Stafford Cripps to India. In the meantime, the savages of indecision take their toll on the morale of the British populace, for they know that almost a fifth of their normal standard of living is dependent upon the intelligent solution of this problem.

The British people have belatedly awakened to the reality that betterment of conditions in England during the nineteenth century was due to England's position of imperialism supremacy in the world. The British people feel that while traditional forms of imperialism are disintegrating rapidly, that this problem must be solved for immediate military as well as long term economic reasons. That is why the Churchill government wrestles today with a new, dynamic concept of empire relations—a problem which becomes doubly difficult because it must solve not only a colonial situation but maintain the confidence of its constituents at home.

Whether or not the Churchill government can help to forge a people's compact in the Far East which is a fiery challenge to Japan's "Asia for the Asiatics" propaganda, must remain unanswered until Sir Stafford Cripps has discussed Britain's new plan with India's warring ethnic factions.

Our Fifth Column

By Roscoe Drummond

Its Right To Abuse Free Speech

THE UNITED STATES is the only belligerent in World War II wittingly harboring an active, aggressive Fifth Column movement.

It is run by Americans openly doing the work of the Axis within the Nation.

It is defeatist. It accepts the loss of the war. Its whole program of domestic fascism is premised upon the loss of the war.

It is acting to demoralize the morale of the American people and thwart the war effort.

It is a growing movement.

The Christian Science Monitor can state authoritatively that there are 95 pro-Nazi, pro-Japanese subversive publications being published in the United States today with a total circulation of several millions.

Nothing is being done about it.

Numerous of these publications emanate from New York and Chicago, the great centers of population, but there is hardly a State, without one or more. Four of the more violent are published in the Midwest. Two are edited by clergymen.

These magazines, newssheets and mimeographs, flowing unchecked through the United States mails and reaching every section of the country, are setting the war-time "party line" of American fascism. Baldly and bluntly, they are urging Americans to throw out their elected Government—by force, by mob action, by bloody revolt, if necessary and stand ready to take advantage of every military reverse, every difficulty of the war as the occasion to press their attack from within.

These publications are edited and the movements they are stimulating are directed by the long-identified American Fascist agitators—former Bundists, former Silver Shirtists, former Christian Fronters and different brands of Coughlinites.

Many who were once actually working through the America First Committees to achieve ends the leaders of America First genuinely disavowed, are today out in the open. While sincere isolationists are today working to help America win the war, these groups today spend little time and few words in concealing their purposes and are engaging in a Nation-wide, mass-scale propaganda which can have no other effect than to help America lose the war.

THE DEPARTMENT of Justice is tolerant.

It is aware, of course, that publications exist. It knows what they they are up to. The Federal Bureau of Investigation is watching them. Justice officials frequently examine their contents.

But nothing is being done.

Nothing is being done at the specific and carefully weighed decision of the Attorney General, Francis Biddle, who does not wish unnecessarily to impair free speech and who is holding to the legal principle that unless seditious utterances plainly produce seditious acts, then the utterances should be allowed to continue unhampered.

They are continuing unhampered. They are increasing. They are construing the Justice Department policy as an all-out invitation to cast off all restraints.

Although Mr. Biddle is himself one of the most conscientious liberals and honest and faithful public servants in the Government, he is being accepted by the American talk-the-war-down Fascists as a helpful ally. A boastful pamphlet distributed at a Pacific Coast rally proclaimed it this way:

"Remember: the United States Attorney General says we have a perfect right to talk—and we will!"

And talk they do. And write, and print, and publish and circulate, unhampered in their methods of undermining American morale by the fact that their Nation is engaged in a life and death struggle to preserve its very existence.

All this talk—all these printed words—regularly being pushed into the hands and in the minds of millions of Americans—is the kind of talk which is also proceeding from Berlin and Tokyo and Rome. It is the poison of Axis propaganda being freely poured out at home to supplement, and perhaps prepare a more fertile soil for the Axis propaganda which is also being directed at America from short-wave radio abroad.

A representative of the Christian Science Monitor has exhaustively examined a whole cross-section of these subversive publications made available to him by a high official of the Government. He has checked, not one issue, but numerous issues of the great majority of them, and—whatever the law is at the present time—the report cannot be other than that they are unquestionably doing the work of the enemy within.

Seek persistently to poison American thought with the most virulent racial hatred and animosity.

Blame, not Hitler, but Britain for starting the war in Europe.

Accuse, not the Japanese, but the American Government for starting the war in the Pacific.

Try to divide the United States from its allies by identifying the whole program of aid to Britain as a British-Jewish plot.

Urge that the United States quit fighting and concede the war to the Axis.

Appeal to Americans to recognize all of Germany's aggressions in Europe and all of Japan's in Asia and call it quits.

Undermine the country's faith in its elected representatives attacking the President individually and at length but calling for the overthrow of Congress as well.

Leave uncriticized, uncensored Hitler, Mussolini and the Japanese while constantly denouncing Mr. Roosevelt, Mr. Churchill, the international bankers, the Jews and the British.

Follow in nearly all lines the pattern of Nazi propaganda which has been coming over the short-wave radio since Pearl Harbor and which Archibald MacLeish, director of the Office of Facts and Figures, recently described as a veritable "Bordia Bund" of misinformation.

In spirit, in effect, in sum total these publications—apart from being violently anti-British, anti-Ally, anti-Semitic and antiwar-effort—are comprehensively anti-Democracy.

WHILE there is not definite evidence that collusion exists among the editors of these publications, it is understood that they exchange mailing lists and they frequently publish complimentary blurbs to boost one another.

The editor of the Galilean, published in Indiana and previously mentioned in these columns, is the leader of the pro-Fascist Silver Shirts, William Dudley Pelley, who was arrested and convicted of fraud in North Carolina in 1935 and given a suspended sentence, was convicted of violation of the terms of his suspended sentence, by a North Carolina court on January 21, 1942, and was ordered to commence serving his sentence. He appealed the case and is at present at liberty from these court proceedings and is also at liberty to carry on his fight against the democratic cause.

In addition to assertions against America's role in the war, the Galilean is now found to advance the interesting thesis that what has happened beginning December 7 at Hawaii makes America anti-Christian and Japan pro-Christian.

"What truly is happening," Mr. Pelley is allowed to preach to Americans, "is that the nations of the whole world have lined up, or are in the process of lining up, into two stupendous camps—Christian and anti-Christian, Aquarian (whatever that is) and Luciferian."

"Two of these strangest contradictions of our times are that Buddhist Japan is listed (by Mr. Pelley) in the Christian-Aquarian column, while the United States has been maneuvered (as Mr. Pelley puts it) into the anti-Christian and Luciferian."

Sponsor of the Axis line that the United States just made it inescapable that Japan attack her because the United States wouldn't furnish Japan with the materials with which to carry forward the war against China, the Galilean proceeds to tell the American people that their morale is "so low that they must stand on a sheet of paper to look into the eyes of a mouse."

"Britain will not admit she caused the war," states Social Justice, the Coughlin magazine, "yet Britain declared war against Germany before Germany declared war against Britain. Thus (and this seeks to give Japan her out also) priority in the declaration of war may have little or nothing to do with the cause of war."

As to Japan specifically, Social Justice plainly asks the Nation to believe that the United States was the cause of the war because the American people preferred not to help Japan fight China.

"We cut off Japan's supply of oil and steel," it laments. "We refused to buy Japan's silk; we strangled Japan's economy. In a word, the United States was engaged in a white war against Japan before Japan became engaged in a blood war against us."

America in Danger is another of the anti-Government sheets which follows the pattern of Axis propaganda, and on its masthead proclaims the motto: "End the War Quickly," but it appears to favor ending by giving up, not by fighting it.

AMONG the other active organs of domestic fascism are Publicity, which is desirous of seeking the whole Government impeached; the Defender, edited by the Rev. Gerald Winrod, of Kansas, and the Fiery Cross, published at Atlanta, Ga., under the auspices of the revived Ku Klux Klan.

Virtually all of the subversive, antidemocracy, anti-Win-the-War publications are at the same time anti-Jewish and anti-British. A little sheet called the X-Ray and published in Muncie, Ind., is another illustration. The editor blandly avers that he would either be "A knave or a Willkie" if he failed to propaganda the idea that, far from Hitler being to blame for anything, it is really "the secret manipulations of the new money powers that brought this war about."

All of these Fascist magazines know that they are skirting the borderlines of the law and are tempting a democratic people to defend themselves from the abuse of free speech in time of war. This is frankly disclosed in the warning published in the Omaha publication, America in Danger, which seeks to avoid running afoul the Army with this disclaimer:

"Notice—If any soldier receives America in Danger bulletin, I did not send it. If any subscriber joins armed forces, advise me so I can remove such name from America in Danger—Charles B. Hudson."

Thus the campaign against America's war effort, unrestrained, unrestricted, unhampered by any official deterrents from the Government.

The Department of Justice would most certainly, it should be said, wish they could be stopped but it is not yet apparently ready to rule that the pro-Axis enemy from within is sufficiently dangerous or a sufficiently bad actor to justify any check upon his right to abuse free speech at this time.

The Gallup Poll

By George Gallup

Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

Princeton, N. J., March 13.—The willingness of the American people to accept basic changes in employment, work habits and routine of daily life for the sake of the war effort is evidenced in a survey just completed by the American Institute of Public Opinion which reveals these three facts:

1. Approximately half of all American housewives would be willing to take jobs in defense factories. Many of them may be pressed into service, since the employment of women in war industries is lagging far behind that of World War I, according to the National Industrial Conference Board.

2. Nearly six out of every ten employed persons throughout the country would be willing to change their present occupations for a job in a war factory at whatever pay that job would give.

3. More than a third of these workers would even be willing to move to another city or locality in order to work in a war industry.

Most Need Training

Many in the above groups might not, of course, have the proper skill and training for factory work, but the results of the Institute survey indicate that no labor shortage should occur in war industries because of any lack of willingness by the public to put its shoulder to the wheel.

Actually, at the present time, the survey shows, only about one-fifth of the Nation's employed workers say they are in jobs connected directly or indirectly with the war effort. With an additional three-fifths willing to change to a job in a war factory, and with housewives willing to leave the home for factory work, the labor pool available to war industries is literally endless.

If the public had its way, this pool would be subject to conscription for war work in a total mobilization program. A survey completed early this week showed the voters of the country nearly two to one in favor of giving the Government the right to tell every able-bodied man and woman in the country exactly what to do as his or her part in the war effort.

Four Angles Covered

The Institute's survey on the manpower situation covered four aspects. The questions asked, and the results, are shown below:

The first question, which was asked of a cross-section of all part-time and full-time employed persons throughout the country, was:

"Is your regular job in any way connected with the war effort?"

Twenty-one per cent claimed their work was connected either directly or indirectly with the war effort, while 79 per cent claimed that it was not.

All employed persons not working directly in the war effort were then asked:

"Would you be willing to change your job to one in a defense factory at whatever pay the defense job would give you?"

Yes	57%
No	40
Undecided	3

Analysis of the returns by income groups shows that while a larger proportion in the lower income level would be willing to change—presumably attracted by the hope of better pay—nevertheless, a substantial number even in the top income class, nearly two-fifths in fact, signify their willingness to change to a defense job, even though it would in many instances involve a reduction in income.

All workers who voted affirmatively on the above question were next asked:

"Would you be willing to take a defense job in another city?"

Results are:

Yes	33%
No	50
Undecided	12

Finally, all housewives in the sample were asked this question:

HOUSEWIVES ONLY

Yes	49%
No	50
Undecided	1

British Found More Pro-Russian

Although the average Britton has no love for communism, continuing collaboration between Britain and Russia after the war is viewed as a realistic course by the majority of Britons polled by the British Institute of Public Opinion.

Careful Riding Demanded As Bike Traffic Grows

By John F. Gerrity
Post Staff Writer

In 1935, when the Archives Building was completed, few of the cyclists who sped by its wide front paused to think that the history and the future of the bicycle was simply inscribed in the newly carved front stone pillar—"what is past is prologue."

Reporter Gerrity Rides Bettejane Greer on the Handlebars. This Is Fun, but Dangerous Riding

In the early 1900's the bicycle was certainly practical transportation. From about 1920 to 1933 it was a child's toy. From 1933 to last Tuesday it was principally a health-insuring device for adults. Tuesday, the bicycle was once more practical transportation.

In 1933, when the revival of the grown-ups' use of the bike started, exercise and recreation were the bases for its rebirth. These are still important.

The eleven large bicycle manufacturers have stopped trying to sell bikes. They are selling health and safety.

Hospitals, sanitariums and health clubs have long used the so-called stationery bike as a health builder. The combined suggestions for wise bicycle use offered by manufacturers, automobile safety clubs and traffic officials, and approved by Dr. James Dolce, of the United States Public Health Service, can be summed up as follows:

1. See your physician for a complete examination before taking up bicycle riding as a regular means of travel.
2. Be sure that you receive competent instruction, both in riding the bike and extending ordinary courtesies to other riders and pedestrians.
3. Make sure that your bike fits you.
4. Bike riding is not health—it is only a means to health. You must do at least as much as the bike.
5. Don't overdo.

Too many riders feel that their jobs are over as soon as they have purchased their bicycles, W. E. Bratton, Washington dealer, said yesterday. Many safety programs were devised and aimed at all sorts of conveyances, but in many instances the cyclist received scant attention. Many bike riders continue to roam the streets, giving motorists, pedestrians and other cyclists the jitters, and have often landed in a hospital for a lack of knowledge of their traffic responsibilities, he stated.

A recent survey in Pittsburgh of 110 riders, averaging 5.6 years of riding experience, proved a general ignorance of the simplest rules of good bicycle etiquette. Seventy-four of the 110 had accidents serious enough to cause them to miss work; 17 hit motor cars; 12 were hit by cars; 11 hit pedestrians and 34 hit other bicycle riders. Only 27 knew that it was a violation to "hook" a ride on a moving truck or car. Only one knew the answer to the question: How many should ride a bicycle at one time? Twenty-five even confessed that they were guilty of weaving in traffic.

Safety clubs, police officials and manufacturers have exerted Herculean efforts to promote an educational program to make safer roads and streets which are becoming more heavily congested each day. The League of American Wheelmen, which in the past did much to promote better roads and sane traffic regulations, is expanding now to help the many new bike riders. But they all admit that they can do little without the cooperation of the riders.

A program recently begun in several cities provides for the registration and inspection of bicycles. The inspection includes a test of brakes, lights, handlebars and reflectors. Most important of all, the service requires a pledge from every cyclist to do his bit for sound bike operation. And no bike can appear on the streets without having been inspected.

In commenting on the inspection program, Dr. Dolce said yesterday that "It was a pity the inspection couldn't be extended to include the cyclists, also. But since they have never been able to require thorough physical examination of autoists, it is a little too much to hope for in the case of bicycle riders."

As an additional aid to the new advocates of cyclomania, leading Washington stores are featuring specially designed clothes for bike riding. For the ladies, there are one piece slack suits, split skirt suits and the inevitable "shorts," all designed with an eye toward simplicity, and of the lightest fabrics possible.

For the new era bicycle "Johnnies" the long promised "defense" suits will be ideal. The narrow bottomed trousers, minus the cuffs, will save many a gentleman from an untimely spill.

War! Air Raid! Here . . .? Pass My Bottle, Mom!

By Scott Hart
Post Staff Writer

A completely complacent fellow has flown in from the war zones, taking danger with a doze and remembering past bombardments yawningly.

Richard Wallace Clay, four months old today, had lived about three weeks when the Japs flew over Pearl Harbor, setting off concussions that shook the plastering loose in the home of his parents, Lieut. and Mrs. William Loring Clay, in Honolulu.

Not far away naval ships were being blown up, anti-aircraft guns were blazing, planes were machine gunning and hundreds were dying. But being a healthy fellow Richard Clay pulled at his bottle.

Then, taking the falling plaster as a game played to put him to sleep and the thunderings as something not yet confided, he went to sleep.

About an hour later a man knocked on the door to inform Mrs. Clay that she had better go quickly to the bombshelter.

MRS. CLAY AND SON, RICHARD

"But how can I," she said, "when I have a 3-week-old baby asleep in the house?"

But she got Richard to the shelter and stayed there all day, mothering him. There was no way to heat his bottle so she looked around for a way—to see it after a while in the hot sunshine that lay on the Hawaiian ground outside the shelter door.

She was bothered that machine guns still might be pointing down from the skies, that her hand, outstretched with a glittery bottle might make a target. But the sun heated the milk. And Richard slept again through the lingering anxiety.

After long waiting for their turn, Richard and his mother took the Clipper out of Honolulu, and the coast, falling away, was one of the loveliest sights Mrs. Clay had ever seen. It got cool high up and Richard slept under blankets, sprawled in a seat. Regularly during the 16 hours of flight Richard spoke out for his bottle, every four hours. Then the steward heated it.

He and his mother are back home for the duration now, planning to spend part of the time with Mrs. Clay's father and mother, the Rev. and Mrs. Alvin Lamar Wills, of 1328 Webster Street Northeast.

Life Story of Philippine Defender

MacArthur The Magnificent

By Bob Considine
Copyright International News Service

ON DECEMBER 29 great fleets of Japanese bombers brushed aside the few American planes MacArthur still possessed and for two hours bombed Corregidor, Fort Drum and the other granite arsenals that lie athwart the entrance to Manila Bay. The forts barked back savagely, with antiaircraft guns, and sent 15 Japanese planes into the bay. But in frustration, or perhaps out of sheer deviltry, the bombers that did not fall and could not blast the forts out of the water, roared on over defenseless Manila and subjected it to a bombing so merciless that in their helpless rage many natives came on to the streets with ordinary rifles and hunting irons and shot at the impervious bombers.

MacArthur put that fury into words the next day. War Department communique No. 35, smacking strongly of MacArthur's pregnant prose, reads:

"A survey of the damage done to undefended Manila by the repeated senseless and savage bombing by Japanese aircraft, after it had been declared an open city, has been practically completed. This survey indicates that churches and other centers of Christian worship and culture were deliberately selected as special targets for enemy attacks . . ."

And then, quoting MacArthur directly, the War Department communique added, after MacArthur's brief review of the damage done:

"It is notable that before Manila was declared an open city and before our antiaircraft defense evacuated therefrom he (the enemy) had abstained from attempted bombing of anything in Manila except military installations. His present actions can only be deemed completely violative of all the civilized processes of international law.

"At the proper time I bespeak due retaliatory measures."

MacArthur safely got a hospital ship, the Mactan, away from Manila on December 31, loaded with wounded, and in time it made its way to Australia. And on the same day the ship left, he further shortened his lines in Pampanga Province and, forever the observer of "civilized" warfare, ordered that 3000 Japanese aliens in Manila be placed under special guard to protect them from mob violence.

Japanese tanks clanged into Manila at 3 p. m. January 2, 1942. The War Department communique explained:

"The tactical situation in the vicinity of Manila necessitated a radical readjustment of the lines held by American and Philippine troops, and a consolidation of defense forces north of Manila. This maneuver was successfully accomplished in the face of strong enemy opposition. The consequent shortening of our lines necessarily uncovered the road to Manila and made possible the Japanese entrance into the city. As it had been previously declared an open city, no close defense within the environs of the city was possible.

"The loss of Manila, while serious, has not lessened the resistance to the Japanese attacks. American and Philippine troops are occupying strong positions north of the city and are holding the fortified island of Corregidor and other defenses of Manila Bay effectively, preventing the use of the harbor by the enemy."

CONTENT, apparently, that was but a matter of time before the American forces would be crunched between the ever-closing jaws of the 3-sided Japanese onslaught, the generals in charge concentrated on January 3 and 4 on attempting to blow Corregidor to bits again. For five hours, on the third, 60 bombers rained bombs on that indomitable fortress in Manila Bay. Thirteen of the defenders were killed and 35 wounded. Mrs. MacArthur and the general's son were believed to be there during that and subsequent raids.

On January 4 the Japanese commander in charge of Manila ordered soldiers to shoot any white person discovered on the streets of the city, and the heavy Japanese forces to the northwest of MacArthur's rough "British square" in Pampanga attempted to storm southward to block out the last exit hope of escape to Bataan. It was a desperate hour for MacArthur.

But the American and Filipino troops fought back so savagely in a counterattack that the drive was not only stopped but the Japanese were pushed back—widening the doorway to Bataan.

Stealthily, fighting tremendous rear-guard actions, MacArthur led his battered and beleaguered Army westward and then southward into the volcanic peninsula he had chosen so many years before.

And the great Japanese army of the north and the Japanese army of the south collided all along the line, only to find MacArthur's men gone, as if in thin air. Yet MacArthur's retreat into Bataan was so intricately and competently achieved that he had time to drive herds of cattle before him—to augment the food stores he had piled up there. The Americans and Filipinos sad escaped the great trap by dint of matchless generalship.

On January 5, while digging in on Bataan, MacArthur ordered the first of a series of dramatic moves which were to give the world one of the greatest fighting stories of history.

From out of nowhere he suddenly dispatched a formation of what the War Department communique called "heavy American Army bombers," and they battered a Japanese fleet off distant Davao. Whence they came, and to which field they returned, MacArthur did not say. But he did report that the fleet in question consisted of a battleship, five cruisers, six destroyers, 12 subs and 12 transports. Three of the heaviest type bombs fell on the battleship and "more than one" destroyer was sent to the bottom.

The attack was so unexpected that the Japanese hardly had a plane in the air. The enraged Japanese, in reprisal, bombed Corregidor for hours on January 7 and subjected MacArthur's Bataan installations to an equally relentless bombing.

NOW, ONE MONTH after the first Japanese bomber appeared over the Philippines, MacArthur and his men began their historic delaying action. They dug in on Bataan, which is 20 miles wide, along a line halfway down the peninsula. Mighty Corregidor stood at their rear, at the lower tip of the peninsula. And down from the north of the peninsula the Nipponese tidal wave rolled, bent on snuffing out this audacious and elusive foe.

MacArthur's men had been fighting for a full month without respite, and with little sleep. His Filipinos worried through the long nights, wondering what had become of loved ones at home. And upon MacArthur, inevitably, fell the job of keeping up their morale. This is the way he kept them white-hot with rage, and filled them with an appetite for battle:

"Gen. MacArthur (reported in Communique No. 50, after MacArthur had made the same known to his troops) has received reports of widespread damage to defenseless towns in Luzon by Japanese air raids. These attacks took place at various times during the invasion and were without military value to the enemy.

"Among the towns mercilessly bombed were Baler, Santa Rosa, Calamba and Tarlac, all of which were completely razed. Many natives were killed in these attacks. None of these towns contained any military installations. During the last few days civilians in Arayat, Camiling, San Fernando and other towns were machine-gunned in the streets by low-flying enemy planes.

"The Japanese apparently deliberately chose Sundays and religious holidays for these attacks, knowing that on such days a large number of civilians would be attending church or on the streets." MacArthur reminded his country after reminding his predominantly Christian Filipino troops. "The first attack was made on Sunday, December 7, 1941, and on each subsequent Sunday and on Christmas and New Year's Day enemy air attacks have been particularly heavy.

"As was the case in Manila, the churches in the towns and villages were made the special objects of attack. Each church is an outstanding landmark and its distinctive character is readily apparent, hence the destructions of places of worship was obviously premeditated."

THE NEXT DAY MacArthur reported that "the morale and determination of the American and Philippine troops are high. They may be counted on to continue their resistance with skill and courage." He added, "the enemy continues to move troops into the forward areas, apparently in preparation for a renewed attack in force."

The Japanese opened up with a tremendous artillery barrage on January 12. The American artillery answered, silenced 11 Japanese batteries and when Japanese tanks, the cutting edge of the Japanese advance, came crunching down the long ravines, the American antitank guns and artillery guns fired point-blank and turned the columns of tanks into twisted, burning heaps.

Hardly able to believe that the Americans and Filipinos could be as strongly entrenched as their January 12 resistance indicated, the Japanese commanders sent out suicide patrols to sound the American lines. The fanatical troops, with little protection, walked and rode into the very muzzles of American and Filipino guns and were slaughtered in great numbers.

On January 17, the Japanese made a tremendous effort to turn MacArthur's right flank and begin an encircling movement. But the general flung his strength to the right and beat back a vastly superior force. In his message to the War Department the next day he warmly praised the native troops for their courage and determination. "Six weeks of hard fighting have made veterans of the soldiers of the Philippine army," he added. "Their training in the difficult school of actual combat and their battle experience have steadied them and developed their initiative and resourcefulness. They exact a costly toll from each Japanese attack."

The incredible elasticity of MacArthur's tiny fighting forces made itself evident on January 20 when his Bataan line successfully stood off a crushing frontal attack aimed at its middle, with dive-bombing support, while at the same time remnants of MacArthur's Philippine commonwealth army were fighting stiffly against Japanese based near Davao, far to the south, and a sturdy little guerilla force was burning a Japanese airdrome and killing 110 of its guardians, far to the north in Cagayen Valley. Atop all this, five of MacArthur's remaining bombers, joining the battle to save British and Dutch possessions then under siege, winged far down the Sulu Sea, cornered a Japanese cruiser which was escorting a big tanker, sank the cruiser and left the tanker belching flames.

It was an incomparable performance. But by January 20, seven weeks after the battle for the Philippines began, the world had come to expect just such miracles from MacArthur.

Now his name was on every lip, and none of those lips were curled. Vindicated, as no other man in the history of the country ever was, he stood for everything that free men were fighting for, and steadfastly he held back, in at least one unforgettable spot, the poisonous flood that sought to inundate the world.

Fragile Femininity in 'Escape' Chapeau

There are two schools of thought about wartime hats—one that they should be tailored and practical, and the other that they should be feminine and beguiling. Walter Florell, noted New York designer, who will be in Washington Monday with his spring collection at a local store, belongs to the femininity school. He believes that women want hats to express in their charm an escape from war. Especially does Mr. Florell emphasize color this season. His colors are combined with such exquisite technique, however, that every hat can be matched to several different outfits. He manipulates his colors in much the same way the French artist Renoir blended his hues. This designer is also a master at combining fabrics, flowers and veilings with distinctiveness. Each of his hats has such individuality that it has its own name. The one above is called "Tee Dansant." It is immense in proportion, but graceful and wavy in trimming. Maize-colored shantung straw gives a striking background for the black crinoline lace and pale blue curtain veiling

Rat Exhibit Shows Value Of Vitamins

By Ida Jean Kain

THE difference between the peppy little white rat that got all his vitamins and the poor little fellow that got none was so shocking that it made a believer out of one young lady who was headed for malnutrition.

The diet demonstration was put on for the benefit of a skinny little freshman down at New York University. She barely tipped the scales at 85 pounds and was proud of it. Instead of lecturing her, Miss Clyde Schuman, the nutrition instructor, took two healthy young specimens from the white rat colony at the laboratory and put one on the same diet as the student followed, and the other on a balanced menu.

The Ritsy Rat

The rat on the good diet thrived and grew up to be a beauty with a thick, shiny coat. The other looked like a common alley rat, with a scraggly fur coat, mangy in spots; watery red eyes ,and not enough pep to drag himself around. With such examples before her, the young lady was quite convinced that vitamins pay.

The nutrition process of rats is very similar to ours and since their life cycle is 30 times as fast, it is possible to see quick results from a diet. One day in the life of a rat is equal to one of our months, and 12 days to a whole year. In one month the cumulative effects of a diet that has been followed for nearly three years can be seen.

This particular experiment was only a repetition of thousands which have been conducted in the laboratories in the search for what makes up an adequate diet. In this case, the bad results were deliberately induced. But, unfortunately, symptoms of careless nutrition in human beings are just as pronounced. Because they are manifested very gradually, they are not as alarming and so apt to be disregarded.

Check Your Diet

Check your dietary against that which has been proved necessary for abundant health. Here is the diet suggested by Miss Schuman: Three glasses of milk daily; fresh fruits; a green vegetable salad; one baked potato—skin and all; two cooked vegetables, one a green or a yellow; meat, once daily; whole grain bread; at least three teaspoons of butter; an egg daily if possible, or three times weekly at least.

Pants and Petticoats

"Pants or petticoats, it's all the same to us," laundry experts commented when asked what they thought about the very newest trend in feminine undergarments. Made of defense blue percale especially for wear under defense uniforms and tailored suits, these new undergarments have the usual bodice top with back insets of lastex and a side closing. Below the waist, however, knee-length pants replace the familiar gored or bias skirt!

Colors for Blondes

QUERY: In assembling a "good" wardrobe, what should a natural blonde consider for a basic color—brown or black? I like brown very much and have always felt it is more economical for all year around wear, but I know it does not "do things" for me.

ANSWER: If your selection must be limited to brown or black, choose the latter for your basic color. Since you describe yourself as a "natural blonde," brown is supposed to be an unbecoming hue for you. Color experts say that browns, tans, yellow, gray and all intense colors are not advisable.

Caution must be taken in wearing black, however, if you are a pale blonde. A light color should be worn near the face to relieve the harsh contrast. Other colors that are considered becoming are light green, hunter green, fir green, peacock green, turquoise, aqua and copper (all especially advised with green eyes); powder blue, sapphire, ceil, periwinkle, orchid and rose (especially with blue eyes); dusty rose, heather, mauve, chartreuse and cinnabar (with gray eyes); light orange or peach tones and light red or lavender are also considered suitable. Of course, the blues and greens might also serve as basic colors.

'Good Clothes' Investment

QUERY: What do you think about buying "good" clothes? Would it be just as economical to stay in one color fall and winter, spring and summer if good clothes were invested in?

ANSWER: When you say "good" clothes, I presume you mean those that are well made, practical and will hold up for several seasons. I think these "good clothes" should be a woman's first consideration. Others will play a part in the wardrobe to keep a woman looking pretty, gay and attractive for Eastertide, but practical clothes will serve as backlogs.

It might be more economical to stay in one color every season of the year, but your clothes and you will be rather uninteresting if you don't have a little variety. Manufacturers are making practical clothes along with more frivolous ones within the reach of virtually every woman's pocketbook. Think first about your practical clothes, yes, but do not spend so much on them that there is no room in the budget for a set of gay accessories and a spirit-lifting dress. (There will be more clothes next year, too, and they will be just as colorful and gay as ever, in spite of restrictions.)

To Accent Gray Hair

QUERY: I am short and stout with gray hair—although I am not yet middle-aged. I work in the Government in an editorial capacity and want to select a color that can be worn all year around. When I wear black in the winter, and blue in the spring, then I have to get all new accessories.

ANSWER: From one who dresses smartly although "blessed" with prematurely gray hair, here are a few suggested colors: aqua, blue green, wine, soft blues and grayed tones, flesh colors, gray pink and off white. Gray is wearable if spiced by red—however, bright red is not recommended. Yellow or yellow greens are considered the most unflattering colors for gray hair. From this color selection, blue is the most likely choice for year around wear.

As for the difficulty of changing from one color to another, each season, one color choice would solve the problem in part. You still have to make new purchases with the changes of seasons. Often some accessories will carry over from spring to spring or fall to fall; therefore it would not be necessary to buy all new ones. Just add to whatever is already on hand. This system is applicable whether you go into new colors each season or stick to your old ones.

Woman Who Lives With Married Son Disapproves Of Wife's Family Letting 18-Year-Old Daughter Board There; Thinks Environment Unsuitable

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: My son is married to a fine girl who, at the age of 14, became a foster-daughter in a family where there was another daughter slightly younger. The two girls were reared alike,—a fact which the foster-daughter deeply appreciated and still does, as she is a very generous person with a really worthwhile character.

Now, the younger girl is 18 and her family recently moved a considerable distance away from the school she has been attending. As a result, her parents have arranged for her to stay in my daughter-in-law's home during the week. This girl cares quite a bit for my son,—so much so that the fact has been noticed by her own mother, as well as others. I do not approve of the arrangement, as I feel it does not give the girl a proper home life,—the sort she needs at her age. And especially not, under the circumstances.

Is it right for her mother to have her stay with us? (I am a member of the household, too). I must state that arrangements could be made for her to stay elsewhere, although they would not be so convenient, of course. (Her parents do pay for her board; but how much, I do not know). Your opinion of the situation will be deeply appreciated.

R. P. W.

Prejudiced Self-Interest May Underlie View

DEAR R. P. W.: In weighing the pros and cons of the set-up, on the basis of your scant information, the first question to be settled is whether your anxiety about the situation is motivated by self interest or protective concern for the younger generation. It occurs to me that the school girl's presence in the home probably makes you less comfortable than you would be if she were not there. And that your pessimistic attitude may reflect, therefore, a prejudiced and not an objective view.

One wonders, too, whether you are a financially contributing member of the household; or totally dependent. Could the arrangement to "board" her foster-sister have been entered into by your daughter-in-law, somewhat against her better judgment, because it would help pay the cost of your maintenance? You advance the opinion that the arrangement "does not give the (school) girl a proper home life; the sort she needs at her age." Which may well be true. But your expression of concern for her welfare is rather unconvincing, when one considers that you seem not to see or to care that your son and daughter-in-law are deprived of a home life proper to newlyweds,—as a result of your having established permanent residence with them.

In the circumstances, it ill behooves you to question the wisdom of their domestic procedure in any particular. If the girl's family are imposing, in your eyes —you may be imposing, in the eyes of others. And if you must remain where you are—if you cannot "live to yourself"—your prime contribution to the general weal of those involved in the crowded situation must consist in "minding your own business," to the fullest possible extent.

In so saying, I am not indorsing the girl's presence in the picture. As a matter of fact, if she has a serious "crush" on her brother-in-law, which her mother senses, the latter should remove her from his home at once —regardless of the inconvenience entailed. It is unfair to either girl to let the situation drift, in the lazy hope that no harm will come of it.

It is putting the generous-hearted married sister in an intolerably awkward position—if full responsibility is left to her to prevent a "triangle" threat from developing. With her gracious disposition it would be extremely difficult for her to ask either the youngster or her parents to make other arrangements, in order to avoid an unfortunate denouement—even if she saw a storm blowing up. But it seems to me that the problem (if one exists, as described) must be solved by her side of the family, without overt help from you—if you are to remain in deservedly good standing in the household.

And I cannot escape the reflection that if there is such a problem, recognized by your daughter-in-law, she probably feels herself greatly handicapped, by your watchful ever-presence, in dealing with it. After all, from her point of view, you must seem to be the real "outsider," as compared to her sister; and she probably would go to almost any lengths of "suffering silence" to keep up appearances for your benefit.

There is nothing more inhibiting to a bride's initiative, in "holding" her husband, than a defensive conviction of mother-in-law "awareness," no matter how sympathetic the surveillance may be. Which leads me to think that a sudden decision on your part to go visiting for a month, or several months—if such can be arranged—might give her the "inning" she needs to bring the domestic situation under safe control.

'Meet You at Tea,' Says Busy America Seeking Relaxation

WITH time at a premium it is increasingly difficult to spare much time for the old pattern of life—bridge luncheons, dinner parties and late suppers. Most of us need a rest pause, for humans are like clocks, if wound too tightly the energy mainspring snaps. Meeting for tea will provide a pause.

The tea hour is a "natural" for keeping contacts with old friends, for meeting newcomers in this busy wartime city, and for planning defense work. Lent has slowed the tempo of social activities but many Washington hostesses are still asking their friends to drop in for tea. No simple way of entertaining can hold a candle to tea in the American manner—tea brewed to its best, good things to eat, a setting that reflects gracious hospitality and accented with dashes of good humor.

The small dynamo of energy in tea is the stimulant, caffeine. There are many pleasant ways of presenting this tiny dynamo. There's always tea sandwiches and cookies and sconces and marmalade. You can depart from the usual fare and instead of sweets (which seem a bit unpatriotic if they are sugar-laden) serve a bit of "garden sass"—hearts of cauliflower, strips of carrots, celery stuffed with Roquefort cheese, rosy-cheeked radishes. These crisp tidbits, with nuts and raisin bread slices, have what it takes to make vim and vigor and help guests restock on their vitamins.

Then there's always the tea bits that are geared to the average kitchen—simple to make and simply delicious. Cinnamon sticks, golden cheese crusts and pineapple fingers are in that category. Here's the way to make them:

Cinnamon Sticks—Cut thin slices of bread into oblong strips about three-quarters of an inch thick. Trim off crusts, spread with creamed butter mixture. Dip into mixture of brown sugar and cinnamon into which a little grated orange peel has been added. Serve hot.

Golden Cheese Crusts—Use your favorite biscuit dough, adding a few grains of cayenne to the dry ingredients. Add 1 cup grated cheese after the shortening. Roll out ¼ inch thick. Cut into strips about 2 inches by 1 inch. Prick and bake in hot oven. 475 degrees, about 10 minutes. Makes 24 small biscuits.

Strawberries without cream, but with plenty of powdered sugar, are perfect companions to hot crumpets or creamed scones Here is the recipe for cream scones:

English Cream Scones

Sift cake flour to 2 cupsful. Add 2 teaspoons baking powder, ½ teaspoon salt, 2 teaspoons sugar and sift again. Cut in 4 tablespoons butter or other shortening. Reserve ½ of one egg white for glaze. Beat the remainder of 2 eggs well and add /13 cup light cream. Add to flour mixture and stir until flour is dampened. Stir vigorously until mixture forms soft ball and follows spoon around bowl. Turn out immediately on slightly floured board and knead 30 seconds. Roll ½ inch thick and cut in triangles. Place on ungreased baking sheet. Brush tops lightly with reserved egg white slightly beaten; sprinkle with sugar, or sugar and cinnamon. Bake in hot oven 450 degrees for 12 to 15 minutes or until browned. Makes about 12 scones.

Supply Uncertain In Future Because Of Ship Shortage

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin

THE gracious ceremony of tea was introduced into England in the wake of the Far East trade over which we're now fighting. For the duration of this war, at least, the tea-drinking habits of the western world may have to be curtailed unless more ships for importing it turn up than are in prospect at present. Estimates put the stocks of tea on hand in this country at about a six months' supply. Our Army and Navy are expected to consume about five million pounds during 1942—last year our total national consumption was over 107 million pounds.

The main United States supply of tea in the past has been obtained from India and Ceylon, who sent approximately 43 million pounds annually; from Java and Sumatra, who sent about 37 million pounds annually, and from Japan and Japanese-dominated areas, who supplied 20 million pounds annually. The tea industry is an enterprise worth an estimated 200 million dollars annually to the growers.

Centers Around Singapore

Within a 1000 to 1500 mile radius of Singapore more than 80 per cent of the world's exportable supply of tea is grown, and more than four million men and women were engaged in cultivating, processing and distributing it to more than a half billion customers throughout the world.

Among these customers, in relative order of importance are: the United Kingdom, importing an average annual total of 435 million pounds; the United States, 100 million pounds; Australia, 46 million pounds; Russia, 41 million pounds; Canada, 38 million pounds; Holland, 23 million pounds (Since occupation of Holland by Germany there has been no tea imported), and Eire, 23 million pounds.

As a Nation, the United States is the second leading tea importing country in the world and during the last several years has jumped its consumption at the rate of about three million pounds a year. Per capita consumption of tea in the United States is slightly under one pound per year, as compared with nine pounds per year in the British Isles.

United States Prefers Black Tea

India, Ceylon and Java and Sumatra are known as the greatest black tea producing countries in the world. Unlike "black coffee," black tea is not tea served without milk or cream. The other two are green and oolong. Each comes from the same kind of plant, and the difference lies solely in the mthod of processing the leaf after it has been plucked.

Tell Fortunes At Parties

WHICH BEAU would be the best for you? A fortune-teller would say "Consult the horoscopes! It's written in stars!"

Horoscopes are fun for parties and dates. Also, when you have horoscopes already worked out, they're an easy way to entertain.

Are you a daughter of Virgo, born between August 21 and September 20? Don't let your heart wander toward a son of Scorpio (born October 21 to November 20)! Virgo makes you sensitive, imaginative, artistic—with very high standards. Scorpio men are powerful, aggressive—a mixture of saint and sinner. Hardly the type for you!

Think better of your Capricorn friend (born December 21 to January 20). He may be quiet, but he's sterling to the core.

You have great sport telling fortunes with the cards, too.

Our 40-page booklet on fortunes gives meaning of every card and how to deal them. Explains fortune-telling with tea leaves, dominoes, dice, the "crystal." Has horoscope for every month.

Send 15 cents (plus 1 cent to cover cost of mailing) for our booklet, "Let Me Tell Your Fortune," to the NEW YORK OFFICE of The Washington Post, Home Institute, 109 West Nineteenth Street, New York, N. Y. Write plainly your name, address, and the name of booklet.

French Counselor, Wife Give Blackout Party

Cherry Tree Blooms In Vain; Curtains Hide Garden View

By Carolyn Bell

"But with the window blacked out you can't see my cherry tree — it blossomed especially for the party," Mme. Picot was bemoaning to a group of friends yesterday afternoon at the 6-to-8 cocktail party she gave her husband, the Minister Counselor of the French Embassy, Willie Georges-Picot.

Several of the guests, however, were persuaded to step out into the pocket-handkerchief garden in the rear of the charming house on Twenty-second Street and view the blossoming cherry tree. The Picot home, which has an immense drawing room two stories high and a full-length window (efficiently blacked out), is filled with Oriental objects—a token of their many years' stay in China.

Wearing a luscious printed lame gown—the material had arrived only a few weeks before from France—vivid Mme. Picot was busy introducing many of the guests to her brother-in-law and sister, the Financial Attache of the French Embassy and Mme. Barbeau, who make their home in New York. Little and red-headed Mme. Barbeau does not look like her sister "but our voices are the same," she said. And most agreed. Yesterday she was smartly turned out in a black satin suit—with a Paris look—and a pink camellia was tucked at the neckline. M. Barbeau discussed at length the charms of living in New York with a gentleman who was all for the Washington life.

From the small bamboo bar at one end of the room guests were offered cocktails or whiskey and soda—as they liked. Tulips were arranged in low brass bowls just below the lovely Chinese prints that cover the walls. "Please try some of these—I made them myself," said the hostess as she passed about a tray of exotic looking hors d'oeuvres.

Lucia Martins Starts New Job

Young Lucia Martins, who only arrived from Rio several weeks ago, came with her mother, Mme. Martins, wife of the Brazilian Ambassador. Lucia had just finished her first day at work in Nelson Rockefeller's office where she has a job translating. "Imagine starting work on Friday the 13th," the brown-eyed lass from Rio laughed.

The French Ambassador, Gaston Henri-Haye, came in late and was probably among those who stayed on for a buffet supper which followed. Rear Admiral David Le Breton, complete with medals and uniform, chatted in a corner with a group of guests. Mrs. Henry Allen, wife of Lieut. Col. Allen, was accompanied by her house guest, Miss Mary Hoyte Wiborg, who only recently returned from France. Wearing a cunning hat, Mme. Brousse, whose husband is press attache of the Embassy, sat on a high stool at the bar and chatted with a group.

Gen. Chu Attends Party

"The Siamese Minister was so surprised to hear someone speak to him in his native tongue," laughed Mme. Barbeau as she told one of the guests that she lived in Siam for several years and learned the language. The Siamese Minister (or Thai, if you prefer) was accompanied by Mme. Pramoj. Mr. and Mrs. Lee P. Murphy were there, as were the Military Attache of the Swedish Legation and Mme. Wessel, the Attache of the Spanish Embassy and Mme. Echegaray, and Mrs. Harold Hinton.

"It's like Macy's on bargain day" is the way Mme. Bianchi, wife of the Minister of Portugal describes Washington of today. "And I don't like it. New York seems deserted in comparison," she continued. The Military Attache of the Chinese Embassy, Gen. Chu, and Mme. Chu talked with Dr. Lieu, of the Bank of China and many others.

Society Interested In Lecture by John Mason Brown

John Mason Brown, who is scheduled to lecture here on March 28 at the Mayflower Hotel, for the benefit of the Frontier Nursing Service, will discuss the "Theater in War Time" and will include comment on recent American plays on Broadway, first announced as his subject.

Each year Mr. Brown, one of our most popular platform speakers, as he modestly admits in his book, "Accustomed As I Am," donates his time for the organization started by Mrs. Mary Breckinridge, a fellow Kentuckian, whom he affectionally calls "Cousin Mary."

Mrs. Breckinridge first conceived the idea for her mountain nursing service after her work with Miss Anne Morgan in World War I. She trained in England and as a result a number of Britishers became interested in her plan and many English nurses have since been identified with the group.

Viscountess Halifax, who has long been familiar with the Breckinridge Center, will serve as one of the lecturer's patronesses as will Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, who has visited the center, and has for many years been an enthusiastic friend and supporter of Mrs. Breckinridge and her commendable cause.

Hilda Frances Barnes Is Bride Of F. L. Haas in Evening Rites

Church Ceremony Unites Couple By Candlelight

Blackouts and Friday the 13th held no terror for Miss Hilda Frances Barnes and F. Lowell Haas—and candlelight is nicest for weddings, anyway—"so they were married" last night in the Lincoln Chapel of the New York Avenue Presbyterian Church. The Rev. Peter Marshall officiated against a background of white gladioli.

The bride, who is the daughter of Mrs. Florence Barnes, of Conway, N. C., wore a gown of heavy eggshell satin fashioned with tight-fitting long torso and full skirt, which fell into a three-yard train. Belgian lace outlined the sweetheart neckline, and a finger-tip illusion veil fell from her coronet of matching lace. She carried a bouquet of white lilacs and gardenias.

Matron of honor was the bride's sister, Mrs. Walter McGee, of Washington, who was gowned in light blue faille taffeta with three-quarter length sleeves. Her headdress was of taffeta flowers with a shoulder length blue veil at the back. The old-fashioned nosegay she carried was of mixed spring flowers, mostly pink.

The bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Fred L. Haas, of Omaha, Nebr. His best man was a former Dartmouth classmate, S. M. Vass, of Claymont, Dela. After a motor trip into Virginia he and his bride will make their home at 812 South Pitt Street, Alexandria, Va.

Mrs. Catt Opposes Mandatory Joint Income Tax Returns for Husbands and Wives

OPPOSED to any infringement of women's individual rights, Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, veteran suffrage leader, summoned women to a new crusade yesterday to "oppose mandatory joint income tax returns for husbands and wives."

Speaking out vigorously in a statement issued from her home in New Rochelle, N. Y., Mrs. Catt said: "I never thought I'd have to prove again that 'women are people,' but this tax proposal of Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau for joint income tax returns forces me to."

MRS. CARRIE CHAPMAN CATT

Rallying women who worked for woman's suffrage to write their Congressmen to oppose the bill which seeks to compel husbands and wives to file joint income-tax returns, Mrs. Catt said, "I would like to urge women of this country to prove to their representatives in Washington that we are not in the 'horse and buggy era,' when Blackstone declared that 'by marriage husband and wife are one person in law, the very being or existence of the woman is suspended in marriage.'"

This mandatory joint return for husband and wife would suspend her freedom of choice and her inalienable right to the pursuit of happiness, according to the former suffrage leader. "The Government has manifestly no innate right to determine how a woman should compute her taxes," Mrs. Catt declared. "It is her business to follow the law and the Government should consider her a human being."

Pointing out what she called the unfairness of the joint tax return, Mrs. Catt said: "David Lawrence spoke for me when he said last July 'Congress is putting the heaviest burden on the successful and the thrifty in moderate income groups when it considers a joint husband and wife income tax return.' Where the burden is particularly unfair is with a husband who earns $9000 and has a wife with an income of $3000 from an insurance policy or bequest left by her own parents," she explained. "The combined income of $12,000 now results in an increase of 34.2 per cent in taxes due only to joint returns."

Great Day Thursday

IF YOU'VE tucked away your evening dress for lack of party invitations, Thursday, March 19, is a good day to bring it out. For that day's calendar is chock full of meetings, dinners and dances and, no doubt, you'll be on hand for a few gala events. The SOROPTIMIST CLUB has scheduled a St. Patrick's party for 6 o'clock at the Y. W. C. A. In lieu of the party, the regular Wednesday luncheon meeting has been canceled . . . The WOMEN'S ASSOCIATION OF THE UNIVERSAL-FIRST NATIONAL MEMORIAL CHURCH holds its annual spring dinner, 5 to 7 o'clock. Mrs. Frank W. Ballou is chairman of arrangements.

Bishop Curley Guest

THE MOST REV. Michael J. Curley, D.D., Archbishop of Baltimore and Washington, will be the guest of honor and speaker at the annual rally of the Sodality Union, Monday night, at 8:15 o'clock, Gonzaga Hall. During the evening, motion pictures will be shown of President Roosevelt and Archbishop Curley. Also there will be on exhibit Red Cross and defense work. Mrs. William A. Bailey is in charge of the booths. Patriotic music will be featured on the program.

Women Eligible

UNTIL recently only men could receive the coveted plaque. Now church women are eligible for the Washington Federation of Churches annual plaque award for outstanding layman's service to local religious life.

This was decided at a recent federation board meeting when a committee was named to select the recipient of the 1942 award. The Rev. Dr. Fred D. Buschmeyer, pastor of Mount Pleasant Congregational Church, is chairman of the committee. Other members are Mrs. Merle Cain, Reformation Lutheran Church; the Rev. Dr. Albert J. McCartney, pastor of Covenant-First Presbyterian Church, and the Rev. Robert Brooks, pastor of Lincoln Congregational Church. Mrs. Cain is the first woman ever to serve on this committee.

Woman Civil Defense Aide Takes Leave

Mrs. Sarah V. Montgomery, whose removal from the local civilian defense office was asked the latter part of February by the D. C. Federation of Women's Clubs, is on indefinite leave of absence—but the federation had nothing to do with it, she said last night.

She left her post as special assistant at air-raid warden headquarters on March 4 because she was tired and had to look after some personal business, she declared.

Chief Warden Clement Murphy did not announce until yesterday her "indefinite leave of absence" to Col. Lemuel Bolles, director of District defense, although Mrs. Montgomery has been much in the news since she helped picket the White House last summer as part of the American Peace Mobilization, and papers asking an investigation of her are now before Judge Sam Whitaker, the defense council's judge advocate.

Murphy has defended Mrs. Montgomery as "one of the very best workers we have," and said he would leave his Civilian Defense post if she were forced out. "The FBI can't find out a thing against her," he declared.

Mrs. Montgomery said last night that although she did not know when she would return to her Civilian Defense job, she does intend to return.

Filipino Here Is First to Get Army Commission

Abdon Llorente, Filipino and World War veteran, of Glen Echo, Md., has been commissioned a captain in a Filipino contingent to begin training next month at San Luis Obispo, Calif., it was announced yesterday. He is the first of his nationality to be commissioned since Filipinos were admitted into the United States Army in December.

LLORENTE

Llorente has been serving in the division of nationals' affairs in the office of the Philippines' resident commissioner here. He is a graduate of Columbia University, was a professor of economics at the University of the Philippines and once was exchange professor at the Imperial University in Tokyo.

He served as a lieutenant of infantry in the World War.

Donald Woodward Estate Is Valued At Two Million

Donald Woodward, president of the Woodward & Lothrop department store, who died on February 27 at Miami Beach, left an estate valued at more than two million dollars, it was revealed in District Court yesterday by a petition for probate of his will.

Principal beneficiary is his widow, Mrs. Margaret B. Woodward. He directed that she should have all household furnishings and personal effects and provided that the bulk of his estate be placed in trust, with the income payable to her.

He specified, however, that the voting power of all Woodward & Lothrop stock in the trust fund should be placed in the hands of a quartet of relatives. This consists of Brainard W. Parker, brother-in-law; Catherine W. Tyssowski, Rena W. Parker, and Helen W. Wilson, sisters.

Joint Committees Planned to Speed War Production

Officials of the C. I. O. United Federal Workers of America conferred yesterday with War and Navy Department officials on the possibility of setting up joint labor-management committees in Government arsenals and navy yards to consult on ways of increasing production.

The committees under the C. I. O. proposals would be composed of representatives of all labor unions whose members are involved on both a national and a plant-wide basis.

The C. I. O. group disclosed that several Government agencies in the field have already organized such committees. Agencies involved include the Denver office of the Farm Security Administration, the Denver office of the Social Security Board, and the New York City Customs House.

3 D. C. Marine Officers Advanced

One hundred Marine Corps second lieutenants, including three from the District and two from Virginia, have been granted temporary promotions to the rank of first lieutenant, Marine Corps headquarters announced yesterday.

Francis X. Beamer, Francis P. Daly and Lawrence F. Fox were the three from the District. Ross S. Mickey, of Charlottesville, Va., and Dale H. Heely, of Portsmouth, Va., were the Virginians promoted.

Group Being Trained to Man Raid Information Booths

Emergency information workers to set up booths for clearance of messages and "news" in the event of air raids are being trained in a course that opened yesterday at the new National Museum building on the Mall.

The course is under direction of Mrs. William Galvin of the civilian mobilization branch of the District Defense Council. First speaker was Mary Craig McGeachy, of the British Embassy staff, who explained how the British Citizens' Advice Bureau system operates in England. The system planned for Washington will perform the same duties, Mrs. Galvin said.

Approximately 150 women were present yesterday. Mrs. Galvin wishes at least five from each civilian defense area and said additional volunteers can yet be accommodated.

'Living Letters' For Servicemen

Beginning today service men visiting Washington may send home "living letters" to relatives, friends and sweethearts through voice recordings to be made at the Y. M. C. A., 1736 G Street Northwest, Lawson H. Brown, U. S. O. director, announced yesterday.

The voice recording is an addition to a number of special events arranged each week at the "Y" for the entertainment of service men.

Col. Bayer Resigns As Deputy Raid Warden

Col. Joseph A. Bayer, deputy air-raid warden for the North Capitol Civilian Defense group, yesterday resigned from that position because it is necessary for him to devote all his energies to duties at the War Department, he told Chief Warden Murphy.

Officers to Attend U. of Va. Training School

Army officers will receive training in establishing military government over civilian population in foreign fields at a school established at the University of Virginia, the War Department announced today.

The school will be under the supervision of Maj. Gen. Allen W. Gullion, provost marshal general, and will be headed by Brig. Gen. Cornelius W. Wickerhsam.

Wardens to Mark Opening of Quarters

The air-raid wardens of zone 4, midcity area, will celebrate the opening of their new headquarters at 1327 S Street Northwest this evening at 8 o'clock.

The principal speaker will be Col. Atwood, of the staff of the chief air-raid warden. Certificates will be given to those wardens who have passed their Red Cross examinations.

House Gruop To Call Ruhland On Health Law

Dr. George C. Ruhland, the District health officer, will be called before the House District Committee next Monday to explain whether legislation has been requested to correct unsanitary conditions in slum areas of Southwest Washington, Chairman Randolph announced last night.

At a hearing of the Public Buildings and Grounds Committee Thursday on the 70-million-dollar war housing bill for the District area it was alleged that legislation had been sought to require landlords to install modern plumbing in houses which they rent.

"Such legislation has never been requested to my knowledge," said Representative Randolph. "If it were sought, it certainly would be given prompt consideration."

The District Commissioners also will be requested to attend the open hearing at 10 a. m. Monday in the House District Committee room.

Mothers Seeking To 'Park' Junior And Do War Work

Malden, Mass., March 13 (AP).—A group of Malden women today urged establishment of a national chain of Government-aided nursery schools—to provide safe "parking" for Junior and to free mother for war work on defense committees or in industry.

In a letter to Representative Arthur D. Healy (Democrat), of Massachusetts, 20 mothers described a part-time neighborhood "cooperative nursery school" they had established to allow them freedom for Red Cross civilian defense and other work, and declared:

"Our aim is to make this school a full-time school and to enlarge its facilities so that mothers can be released for national defense and for work in industries producing the weapons to defeat the Axis."

Attorney Seized, Charged With Grand Larceny

Waller B. Smith, 30, an attorney of Alexandria, Va., was arrested yesterday and charged with grand larceny on a warrant sworn out by Commonwealth's Attorney Lawrence W. Douglas, of Arlington County.

Smith was arrested at his home, 325 Duke Street, by Lieut. Russell Hawes, of Alexandria, and Detectives C. B. Pressley and John Sanders of Arlington County. He was taken to the Arlington County jail. Bond was set at $5000.

The warrant charges that Smith "did take and steal from W. R. Kelley Co., certain personal property to the amount of $6,684.59."

Special Dispatch to The Post

Winchester, Va., March 13.—Local tire rationing boards have been informed they will be responsible for rationing sugar when the program is placed in effect, Dr. C. R. Anderson, mayor and defense coordinator, said today.

At a meeting of three rationing boards, two for the county and one for the city, plans for rationing sugar were discussed. A full-time secretary for the boards, Mrs. Vivian Johnson, was appointed.

Rationing books have arrived and preliminary plans for the registration of more than 14,000 persons in Winchester have been made. Similar plans for Frederick County are being completed.

New Streetcars Arriving Daily, Transit Head Says

New buses and streetcars are being delivered to Washington daily, E. D. Merrill, president of the Capital Transit Co., told the Public Utilities committee of the Board of Trade at its luncheon yesterday.

The consignment of 200 buses ordered last fall will be completed within a month or six weeks, he added. The additional order for 300 buses, placed in January, is not expected to arrive until fall.

Doubts that the crowded District streets can accommodate the additional large vehicles were scored by Merrill, who pointed out that they are necessary mainly because autos are being taken off. Since one bus carries as many persons as 15 autos, Merrill feels that the ratio always leaves a safe margin for the buses.

Public Utilities Commissioner James H. Flanagan stated that certain remarks made by P. U. C. Chief Gregory Hankin at a Washington Gas Light Co. hearing, to which the company's counsel took exception, did not, "and could not" reflect the views of the commission.

Speaker Debunks Alaskan 'Icebox'

The Alaskan "icebox" was debunked last night by Karl Robinson, Far North photographer, lecturing before members of the National Geographic Society at Constitution Hall.

Robinson explained that the Japan Stream, flowing out of the Indian Ocean, kept the southern Alaska shore warm at times when the continental United States froze. Flowers bloom in Alaska in February, he said.

W. M. G. Mish, Churchman, Broker, Dies

William Matthew Galt Mish, 53, a leading Washington churchman, died yesterday at Doctors Hospital after several weeks' illness.

Vice president of Green-Mish Co., Inc., wholesale brokerage firm, Mr. Mish for years had been active in work of the Washington Federation of Churches and the Presbyterian Church.

Funeral services will be held at 1 p. m. Monday at the Hines funeral home, 2901 Fourteenth Street Northwest, with burial in Fort Lincoln Cemetery.

A native of Lebanon, Pa., Mish came to Washington with his family at an early age. He attended public schools and the University of Pennsylvania and was graduated from Cornell University.

Mr. Mish was president of the board of trustees of the Washington City Presbytery and a member of the board of directors and the executive committee of the Federation of Churches.

At Gunton-Temple Memorial Presbyterian Church, where he was an elder, he served on the finance committee and taught a Bible study class.

OEM Still Trying To End Mystery Of Pots and Pans

By the Associated Press

The Office for Emergency Management is still trying to find out what happened to all the pots and pans donated by housewives in the aluminum salvage drive nearly seven months ago.

The information division of the office was telegraphed the 29 aluminum smelters which handled the scrap asking for the exact status of utensils still at the smelters or already in ingot form.

Some of the questions which OEM has been unable to answer, in the face of repeated inquiries, are: How much aluminum, if any, has not yet gone to the smelters? How much aluminum collected during the campaign actually has gotten into war production? How much of it was bought by the RFC Metals Reserve Company and how much of it was sold by the smelters direct to industrial users?

One war production board spokesman said comparatively little of the aluminum reclaimed from the pots and pans went into plane production because of its inferior quality, but that the campaign produced a highly valuable stock of secondary aluminum capable of being used in a wide variety of military items.

Yanks in Foreign Forces May Shift

An American soldier now wearing the uniform of any other of the United Nations may soon, if he wishes, transfer to the Army of the United States.

By the same token, United Nations citizens now in the American armed forces, may go over to fight under their own flag.

Fire Flares Again On the Normandie

New York, March 13 (AP).—A fire apparently originating in rubbish aboard the flame-ravaged 60-million-dollar liner Normandie was quickly extinguished today.

Workmen engaged in salvaging the 83,423-ton craft sent an alarm that brought 100 armed Coast Guardsmen, a fireboat and an engine. They brought the blaze under control in 15 minutes.

The liner, seized by the Government last December and converted into the naval auxiliary Lafayette, was damaged by a blaze February 9. She capsized after this fire was extinguished.

Daladier Blames Laxity For France's Defeat

Riom, Unoccupied France, March 13 (AP).—Former Premier Edouard Daladier charged indirectly today at the "war guilt" trial that lack of preparation for war by national defense officials was responsible for France's defeat by Germany.

His testimony supported similar assertions made yesterday by Pierre Jacomet, former inspector general of munitions, who said army officials did not even spend credits granted them by Parliament for fortifications and guns until after Leon Blum became premier in 1936.

Reynolds' Wife Buys Md. Estate

Senator Robert Reynolds (Democrat), of North Carolina, disclosed yesterday that his wife, the former Evalyn W. McLean, has purchased a heavily wooded plantation with a 125-year-old mansion near Waldorf, Charles County, Md., about 20 miles from Washington.

The plantation, known as the Moore Farm, was bought from Claude F. Clarke, Washington real estate man, strictly as an investment, the Senator said. "The land has a lot of timber on it and pulp wood prices are rising," Reynolds pointed out.

Another Admits Texas Slaying Confessed by Prisoner Here

A 22-year-old youth held by Washington police for a holdup here, who volunteered a confession to murdering a motorist in Texas, got strong competition for the claim of killer yesterday.

Texas authorities notified Washington police that one of three suspects in the murder seized at Fort Smith, Ark., had admitted murdering Rudolph Canan, of San Antonio, last week. According to District police, Raymond Stanley McPherson, arrested here while attending a movie last Tuesday night, signed a statement confessing the crime.

While investigating McPherson's confession, police meanwhile took the youth before United States Commissioner Needham C. Turnage yesterday. He was arraigned on a charge of robbing a filling station here February 24. Bail was set at $25,000, in view of the murder confession.

Through his attorney, Daniel B. Maher, the accused youth waived hearing and was held for grand jury action.

1000 D. C. Bricklayers Agree to Forego 25-Cent Pay Increase to Cut Costs of Government Work and Aid in Victory

More than 1000 Washington bricklayers affiliated with Bricklayers Union Local No. 1, have voluntarily decided to forego a proposed increase of 25 cents an hour in their basic pay rate in the interest of victory, The Post learned yesterday.

J. R. Pumphrey, business agent, said that the increase was decided upon last fall before the outbreak of war, but that the union decided to "forget about it" leaving their rate at $1.75 an hour "for the duration."

A $2 an hour rate was scheduled to go into effect May 1 when present contracts with members of the Master Builders Association expire. The unionists who do most of the bricklaying on Government contract jobs in this area had been virtually assured of their increase by the time they agreed to relinquish it, it was understood.

Since wages are calculated as an item of cost by contractors submitting bids to the Government, the increase would have been reflected in higher costs for Government work. Business has been good for Washington bricklayers. About 650 are listed on the unions rolls as regular members, and additional 350 have received temporary work permits.

The proposed increase was listed with the Department of Labor Tuesday at a hearing held to determine prevailing wages on District residential construction. A national official of the bricklayers union saw a report of the hearing and suggested that the union abandon its request in the interest of the defense program.

Blackout Casualty

William H. Boucher, 19, of 7001 Wisconsin Avenue Northwest, fell through a skylight at 515 Twenty-third Street Northwest while observing the blackout. He was treated at Emergency Hospital for cuts to his face and hands.

The Washington Post

*X SATURDAY, MARCH 14, 1942 17

Detective Was Real

Police last night said that Albert Bonham, 21, of 1004 New Jersey Avenue Southeast, tied a handkerchief around his arm, dabbed an insignia on it, and began directing traffic at Second Street and New Jersey Avenue. He stopped one motorist—who proved to be Detective Sergt. Watson Salkeld. Bonham was charged with impersonating an air raid warden.

Navy Yard Siren Adds Realism To District Blackout Test

Unscheduled Alert Brings Confusion In Some Sections

Sounding of an air raid whistle at the Washington Navy Yard last night injected an unexpected realistic note into the four-hour blackout, which defense officials described as even more successful than the all-night test of last week.

The whistle blew at 9 p. m., an hour after the blackout started, and wailed for 15 minutes, air raid warden headquarters reported.

Confusion resulted in some sections of South Washington as residents sought to learn whether an actual raid was in progress. In at least one case, air raid wardens were reported to have ordered automobiles and pedestrians from the streets.

The 15-minute air raid warning in the Navy Yard was planned for the employes and personnel, who dashed to their designated posts in an unscheduled but successful rehearsal, according to an aide of Civilian Defense Director Bolles.

Both the Navy Yard and Navy Department press section issued a denial that the whistle had blown in the yard. Fifth Precinct Station police, however, said they checked with the Navy Yard on hearing the long wail of the whistle and were told that the air raid whistle had stuck.

Fire Alarm Heightens Tension

At about the same time,a fire alarm from the Fox Hotel, 918 Fourteenth Street Northwest, caused considerable excitement in downtown Washington as fire apparatus and a score of police cars responded to the call.

The fire rescue squad was called by S. L. Dameron, night manager, when he was unable to control water from a burst main on the third floor.

A few minutes after the blackout went into effect Mrs. Alice McGregor, 67, was stricken with a heart attack in her home, 1318 F Street Northeast. She was pronounced dead at 8:30 p. m. by a Casualty Hospital physician.

As for effectiveness of the blackout itself, defense officials noted with gratification that it was an improvement over that of March 3 from the standpoint of cooperation by Federal buildings, most of which were lighted the last time, and of an increase in permanent blackout arrangements by householders.

The test showed conclusively, Washington Area Defense Coordinator John Russell Young asserted, that Washington area residents "are all falling in line and cooperating beautifully."

Report 100% Cooperation

They stopped frequently to question some of the 28,000 air-raid wardens on duty and were informed that residents were cooperating almost 100 per cent.

A few lights in the Commerce Building were visible, but all other Federal buildings surveyed by the party were totally blacked out, Landis noted.

Purple lights were used in the Munitions Building, where many employes gathered in the cafeteria and sang songs.

In another automobile touring the city were Chairman Jennings Randolph of the House District Committee, and Commissioner Guy Mason. A third carried Commissioner Charles Kutz and Brig. Gen. Lorenzo Gasser, of the Office of Civilian Defense.

Randolph praised the "alertness" of the wardens and the "understanding" of Washington area residents.

He said he saw only two violations and stopped to learn the cause personally. In one case, he reported, a Boy Scout, alone in his home on Wisconsin Avenue Northwest, had just returned from walking his dog and had inadvertently turned on a light. The boy was "very embarrassed," Randolph said, and immediately blacked out the house.

Mason Deeply Impressed

Commissioner Mason said he was "deeply impressed" with the blackout's effectiveness. While last week's test was a success, he said, increased cooperation made last night's "a real blackout."

Bolles remarked that "apparently everybody is doing his level best." However, he added, a number of business establishments will have to install "light locks"—a sort of interior vestibule—to keep light from showing when the outer door is opened.

The light lock at District Air-Raid Warden headquarters, in fact, was not completely satisfactory when the inspection tour, headed by Coordinator Young, called.

Both Landis and Randolph said a complete blackout—including street lights, which remained ablaze in the last two tests—should be staged soon.

Coordinator Young said that would be done as soon as air-raid warning signals were on hand, but probably another partial blackout would be held in the meantime.

While the District and Arlington County, Va., noted improvement last night over the previous test, Montgomery County, Md., reported violations there were "somewhat greater." Wardens quickly put their beats under control, however.

Federal buildings, exempted from the blackout order, participated voluntarily for the first half hour by merely turning out most lights.

Earlier in the day President Roosevelt said permanent blackout installations should be supplemented by antisabotage precautions. He reported there had been indications of intent to sabotage Federal buildings and Congress probably would be asked to appropriate 18 million dollars for blackout and safety measures at Federal buildings here and throughout the country.

Gun Battle Ends Deserters' Flight; FBI Agent Slain

CHARLES L. TIGNOR
Wounded Five Times

HUBERT J. TREACY
Slain by Army Deserters

Two Army deserters were captured in a gun-and-tear-gas battle on the outskirts of Abingdon Va., yesterday in the final episode of a bloody dash from Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., which left one FBI agent dead, another seriously wounded and an Army sentry critically hurt.

Killed as he sought to question the uniformed pair in an Abingdon lunchroom was FBI Agent Hubert J. Treacy, jr., 28, of Alexandria, Va., and son-in-law of Inspector Maurice Collins, of the Washington Police Department.

Treacy's companion, Agent Charles Tignor, 29, also fell under the hail of bullets, with four wounds in his body.

The fugitive soldiers were identified by the FBI as Privates Charles J. Lovett, 21, of Philadelphia, and James Evans Testerman, 22, of Clinchburg, Va. Both were in the Third Cavalry stationed at Oglethorpe.

Their mad flight began at 3:40 a. m. Thursday in a gun room at the fort, where they beat a sentry and fled with four .45-caliber pistols and some 100 rounds of ammunition. The guard, Sergt. Clifford Hall, of Rossville, Ga., was left in critical condition.

The fugitives commandeered a taxi operated by Charles F. Landreth, of Chattanooga, and forced him to drive them to Cleveland, Tenn., where they put him out and continued their journey into the Virginia mountains.

FBI agents and State and municipal police throughout the South by this time were searching for the men.

With advance knowledge that they probably were in the area, F. B. I. Agents Treacy and Tignor sighted a uniformed pair in the Abington lunchroom shortly after 8 a. m. and entered.

Treacy walked over to the soldiers and asked one his name. The fugitive replied by whipping out two guns and opening fire. The other followed suit, firing at Tignor, who was seated nearby.

Witnesses told the Associated Press that nearly a dozen shots were exchanged and Tignor followed the soldiers out of the restaurant, firing away, before he fell on the street with bullets in the arm, hand, chest and abdomen.

One May Recover

Treacy died shortly afterward in the Abingdon hospital. Tignor, hospital attendants reported, has a good chance to recover.

Still brandishing two pistols each as they dashed into Abingdon's main street, the fugitives commandeered one automobile, but Town Policeman Troy Combs rammed his car into it. They attempted to take another and the driver, Mrs. Elizabeth Kreger, threw the keys away. The pair fled on foot into a nearby cemetery.

Immediately more than 100 police and G-men were actively engaged in the hunt. Many of the police had been attending an FBI civilian defense school at Bristol and were dismissed to aid in the search. Others arrived by plane, train and automobile.

Surrounded in an abandoned house just outside the city limits, the fugitives started to shoot it out with police.

"What are you waiting for?" they shouted between shots. "Why don't you coppers come in and get us?"

Gas Ends Defiance

But when the place was saturated with tear gas, the men stumbled out, choking and waving an improvised white flag. They were taken to jail at Bristol, Va.

FBI Chief J. Edgar Hoover said charges of killing a Federal officer on duty would be filed immediately against the men.

Treacy, the thirteenth FBI man killed in action, was born in New York City and was graduated from Georgetown University here in 1935. He joined the FBI last April 1, after obtaining a law degree at St. John's University Law School in Brooklyn.

Last August 30 he married Miss Eileen Elizabeth Collins, daughter of Inspector Collins, and they lived at 915 South Washington Street, Alexandria, where he was stationed as an agent of the Richmond FBI field office.

Mrs. Treacy was staying temporarily with her parents at 1416 Montague Street Northwest while her husband was away on special work. She is a 1936 magna cum laude graduate of Trinity College and received a master's degree at Catholic University in 1937.

She and other members of the family, distraught over the news of the agent's death, said the funeral probably would be held here.

2 Desert With Car, Guns

Panama City, Fla., March 13 (AP). Maj. H. M. Clavoe, post executive at the Air Corps Gunnery Base near here, said tonight a Nationwide search had failed to locate two heavily-armed privates who went A. W. O. L. yesterday in an Army car.

Earlier in the day the officer urged the men to give themselves up at the nearest military post "because this is wartime and desertion is a serious charge."

Maj. Clavoe said the men, identified by him as Warren L. Rugaber, of Chicago and Walter W. Anderson, of Detroit, would face military charges of desertion and larceny upon their apprehension.

The pair took with them four pistols, two sub-machine guns and about 700 rounds of ammunition when they left in an Army closed reconnaissance car, bearing the number 2052784.

Two Women Killed Here In Blackout

D. C. traffic deaths this year..... 28
Deaths this date last year..... 17
District total last year..... 95

Two persons were killed and four others injured when two autos crashed during last night's blackout at Benning Road and Oklahoma Avenue Northeast.

The dead re Mrs. Emma Newman, 26, and Mrs. John Malloy, 45, both of 1024 Massachusetts Avenue Northeast. Mrs. Newman died shortly after the accident en route to Casualty Hospital; Mrs. Malloy was killed instantly.

Injured and treated at Casualty Hospital were John Curtain, 65, a District government employe, of 215 Seventh Street Northeast; Arline Malloy, 9, of 1024 Massachusetts Avenue Northeast; John Whitfield, 25, and Hubert Waters, 19, both of Bradbury Heights, Md.

Observing the Blackout

According to police, the women killed and the 9-year-old child had been riding with Curtain to observe the blackout. When Curtain's machine reached the intersection at Benning Road and Oklahoma Avenue, it was struck by the car in which Whitfield and Waters were riding. The impact threw the two women from the machine.

After receiving treatment at the hospital, Whitfield was taken to Ninth Precinct station by members of the A. I. U., who had observed the car a few minutes previously and had turned around to give chase. Police questioned Whitfield, who said that another youth was in the machine but jumped out after the crash. The car is listed to Whitfield, police said.

Skidding Car Is Fatal

Earlier in the day John M. McLean, 26, of 1408 Forty-fourth Street Northeast, an auditor of the General Accounting Office, was killed when his car skidded on the Addison-Chapel Road near Seat Pleasant, Md.

Ambrose A. Armstrong, of 1316 Kenilworth Avenue Northeast, who was riding with McLean, was unhurt, police said. Dr. James I. Boyd, Prince Georges County medical examiner, said McLean suffered a broken neck. He is survived by his mother, Mrs. James L. Dawson, with whom he lived.

9 Million Men Wait Tuesday's Draft Lottery

Lists of registrants and serial numbers have already been posted by several District Selective Service Boards in preparation for Tuesday's lottery to determine the order in which 9 million more Americans will be called into the armed service.

The order numbers assigned to registrants in the sequence in which their serial numbers are drawn will begin with 10,001, so that they will follow after the approximately 9000 order numbers drawn in October, 1940, lottery and the 800 drawn in the July, 1941, lottery. This means that the first serial number drawn at the lottery Tuesday will be given Order No. 10,001, the second Order No. 10,002 and so on.

National Selective Service officials were polishing up their goldfish bowl yesterday in preparation for next week's lottery. Secretary of War Stimson, if he returns to Washington in time, is expected to draw the first number of 7000.

To Last 12 Hours

Selective Service employes have been busy the last three days inserting into capsules the numbers to be drawn. The lottery will be held at the interdepartmental auditorium, beginning at 6 p. m., and is due to last about 12 hours. It is expected to provide the same tense, dramatic atmosphere of the first one.

District Director of Selective Service William E. Leahy announced yesterday that registrants who have been deferred because of dependency only, but who wish to compete for selection as officer candidates, must make application through their local boards.

Volunteers and their dependents over 18 years of age must sign an "application for volunteer and waiver of dependency" form. Volunteers found initially qualified by the Army will be inducted among quotas sent by their local boards and given four months training in the ranks to determine if they are potential candidates for commissions as second lieutenants.

May Request Transfer

Those not recommended for an officers' training school at the end of this period may request transfer to the enlisted reserve. They then return to civilian life and are not subject to call unless registrants having similar dependency claims are called.

Those failing to complete the officers' training course or who do not win a commission may likewise request to be transferred to the enlisted reserve or may elect to be reassigned as enlisted men on active duty.

Local Board No. 3

John Franklin Burroughs, jr., Anthony Edgar Carrington, Harry Lenox Chase, Francis Joseph Foley, Norbert Melson Havener, Joseph Frank Marosy, Milton Rickard Reeves, Saverio Edward Tana, Ray Owen Watts.

Local Board No. 4

Heyward Roberts Addison, Josef Constantinescu, Donald Ashley Deane, Henry Joseph DeMayo, William Goldberg, Don F. Hammerlund, Walter Francis Layman, Edgar Clinton Partlow, Daniel Theodore Powell, Marcus Resnick, Julian Rose, Alvah Lynwood Turner.

Local Board No. 16-A

Baroness Korff Ends Her Life After Illness

Baroness Alletta A. Korff, widow of a White Russian nobleman and a daughter of the late Rear Admiral William K. Van Reypen, of the United States Navy, hanged herself yesterday in her home at 2601 Foxhall Road Northwest. She was 65 and had been ill for two years.

Her body was found, clothed in a red housedress, by her son-in-law, R. A. F. Squadron Leader Edward W. Russell, who is in Washington on war business, and Dr. Edward Larkin, a neighbor, of 2611 Foxhall Road. She was hanging in a closet by a rope tied to a ladder leading to the attic of her house. Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald returned the verdict of suicide.

Baroness Korff was the mother of Dr. Serge Korff, an outstanding physicist at New York University. She was born in Washington and was listed in the social register. Baron Korff died in 1924.

Dr. Larkin was called by the baroness' maid, Louise Braswell, who had had the evening off and who spent the chilly night on the doorsteps of the Korff home and in the garage after being unable to get any answer when she rang the bell and beat on the door upon her return home at midnight. The baroness lived alone with her maid.

When dawn came and her knocking still brought no response, Miss Braswell went to the home of Dr. Larkin, who summoned the son-in-law.

In a closet off her bedroom, the two men found the baroness' body.

The baroness was pronounced dead at 8:15 a. m. She had been dead several hours, the physician said.

Dr. James A. Lyons, 1801 I Street Northwest, said Baroness Korff had been under his care two years for "mental exhaustion."

The baroness' husband was Baron Serge Korff, a civil official in the Czarist regime and last Czarist lieutenant governor of Finland when it was a Russian province. He later taught international law at George Washington University and Johns Hopkins University.

The baroness' son, Dr. Korff, has been called "one of the Nation's foremost scientists." He has done much work on cosmic rays and his scientific expeditions have included one to South America under sponsorship of Dr. Robert A. Millikan to trap cosmic rays in instruments carried aloft by airplane. Dr. Korff married Alice Graeme in February, 1937, and they have a daughter.

The baroness' daughter, Mrs. Russell, was formerly Barbara Korff.

Funeral services for the baroness will be private, the family said. They requested "no flowers."

Junior C. of C. Blood Bank Party Tuesday

Postponed from March 3 because of the blackout that night, a benefit card party for the Children's Hospital blood bank will be held Tuesday night by the Junior Board of Commerce at the Annapolis Hotel.

The anouncement came from Donald De Veau, chairman of arrangements. He said a record turnout is expected.

Assisting De Veau are William H. Sardo, jr., and John S. Jacobsen. They had the cooperation of Dan Summerford, assistant manager of the Annapolis Hotel, who recently joined the Navy.

A wives' committee is working on the program, with Mrs. Virginia Creyke in charge, aided by Ethel Tassell.

Parent-Teacher Association participation in the fourth annual blood bank drive, sponsored by the Washington Bridge League, American Legion and The Post, was increased yesterday with receipt of checks from two more units.

To the office of The Post came a $10 check from the Janney P.-T. A. and one for $5 from the Buchanan School chapter.

Although the campaign is scheduled to close in a few weeks, it is not too late for individuals and organizations to give benefit parties for the Children's Hospital blood, serum and plasma bank, which physicians credit with saving many lives since its establishment in 1939.

Souvenir tally cards for bridge parties may yet be obtained by calling at The Post building. Checks are to be made payable to the Children's Hospital Blood Bank Fund and sent to The Post or, if you prefer, direct to Children's Hospital.

Abolition of A. I. U. Urged by Report

Young Reveals 'Secret' Proposals Of Police Investigating Body

Abolition of the Accident Investigation Unit was recommemnded in the "confidential report" by three police officers appointed by the Commissioners to investigate the unit, it was revealed yesterday.

In releasing the report, Commissioner John Russell Young jumped the gun on the Traffic Advisory Council's committee on legislation and enforcement, which had been given the report on March 2, but was pledged to secrecy until its opinion had been delivered to the Commissioner.

Charges of broken confidence were exchanged yesterday afternoon, as Young insisted members of the council had let details of the report "leak out" and the individual members retorted Young had broken confidence.

Findings of Investigators

Major recommendations were:

"That the Accident Investigation Unit as presently constituted be abolished, with the understanding that it be reestablished on a squad basis if and when personnel bceomes available.

"That there be three cars assigned to the Traffic Division and provided with photographic and brake-testing equipment and other necessary equipment for the investigation of serious and fatal traffic accidents.

"That the acting lieutenant (Detective Bureau) be presently assigned to the Accident Investigation Unit and continue to be utilized in the investigation and preparation of cases arising out of fatal traffic accidents before coroners' juries and courts, and when not so occupied, in other assignments given to him by the chief of detectives.

"That all other personnel, records and equipment now assigned to the Accident Investigation Unit be retained in the Traffic Division, but utilized and available for other duties when not assigned in traffic cruisers.

That only the best 24 photographers and investigators of the unit's present staff of 41 privates and three sergeants be retained, these to work "regular tours of duty under the command and direction of the commanding officer of the Traffic Division."

Nine Points of Agreement

These recommendations were based on nine points of agreement among members of the police committee: Assistant Superintendent Harvey G. Callahan, Inspector Milton D. Smith and Capt. Oscar J. Letterman, and apparently arose from a common belief that investigation of minor accidents is unnecessary.

Investigation of fatal or serious accidents, they said, requires the use of the special personnel with the "necessary brake testing device, photographic equipment and other paraphernalia for conducting investigations," whereas minor accidents can be satisfactorily handled by the precincts.

One reason why the committee saw fit to disapprove of the unit was that it lacked adequate personnel to "undertake a comprehensive accident and prevention program as outlined by the traffic accident prevention course of the Northwestern University Traffic Institute," and that the unit could not be increased because of defense demands upon the traffic department.

Opposed to the findings of the committee are the resolutions adopted by various civic organizations, and statements of the Traffic Advisory Council, giving wholehearted backing to the traffic investigation unit.

"Recognized as Effective"

Washington I. Cleveland, District manager for the American Automobile Association, said, upon being informed of the release of the committee's report:

"The Accident Prevention Unit is recognized in the field of law enforcement as one of the most effective means of bringing about reduction in traffic accidents and fatalities. The unit has been in operation since September, 1940, and the record shows it has made a valuable and indispensable contribution to the enforcement of traffic rules and regulations in the Nation's Capital. In my opinion its abolition would be a major disaster."

William T. Cameron, chief safety adviser to the Secretary of Labor, said, "Though the report seems to have been well prepared, I can't say that I agree with all of its conclusions."

Harry S. Wender, vice president of the Federation of Citizens' Associations recalled that the Federation and the Safety Committee of the Traffic Advisory had recently gone on record as backing the Accident Investigation Unit.

As chairman of the Traffic Advisory Council's subcommittee on legislation and enforcement, Wender regretted that the Commissioners saw fit to release the report before it had been studied.

Subcommittee Silent

The members of the subcommittee still felt the obligation of confidence upon them, and would make no comment upon the contents of the report until they had delivered their findings to the Commissioners, as was the original agreement.

Young refused to put on the record his reactions to the recommendations, although he felt no particular obligation to secrecy.

"Details of the report have been given out bit by bit, and I think it better that the public get the whole picture. The Traffic Advisory Council's committee did not regard the report as confidential, so why should I?" was Young's explanation of his surprise tactics in putting the report before the public.

Powder Factory Theft Defendant Is Free on Bail

Paul G. Yula, Bellevue Naval Magazine worker charged with stealing fuse mechanisms and secret papers from the powder factory, failed to appear in District Court yesterday to be arraigned before Justice F. Dickinson Letts.

A bench warrant was issued for his arrest as a fugitive, but was later canceled when it was discovered that the man was legally free on a $1000 Police Court bond. His bondsman assured the Court that Yula would appear for a rescheduled arraignment next Tuesday and that his whereabouts were known.

The mixup resulted from the fact that the 27-year-old former radio operator was indicted by the grand jury for larceny from the United States while his case was still technically pending in Police Court. His bond was not recorded in District Court.

Fewer and Better Films Add to Season's Luster

Long Runs Make 'Good Old Days' Look Silly; 'Hoot' Gibson Coming to Town in Rodeo; Items of News and Gossip of the Theater

A RECENT ENTHUSIASM appearing here anent the ample quantity and high quality of bookings at the National, might just as well have gone a bit further and included the cinema among the primary factors that are making this a memorable theatrical season in the Capital. There may not be so many pictures on view over a span of months as formerly, but those that do come along are of infinitely better texture and stay longer.

BOB HOPE

In a retrospective moment recently, we were recalling that when the Rialto Theater—now reduced to one of the more spacious of the downtown parking lots—opened in 1918 under an avowed policy of full-week bookings for all its features, that announcement was looked upon as a bit of bravado that couldn't possibly stand up. The Metropolitan, Palace and Columbia, on F Street, were still splitting weeks. A little later, with week runs having become the rule, when the Metropolitan proclaimed a second week for the silent version of "The Count of Monte Cristo"—John Gilbert, Estelle Taylor, George Sigmann, et al—the trade press hailed it as something slightly epochal. And now look at the darn things!

"Ball of Fire," seven weeks; "Hellzapoppin," three weeks; "The Woman of the Year," three weeks; "Citizen Kane," three weeks, the second time around; "Son of Fury," now in its second week, etc., etc., all on pages of the calendar you probably haven't torn off yet. "Time marches on!" as that man says.

To bring the business still closer, take "Louisiana Purchase"—as practically everybody is. Now in its second rousing week on the Earle screen, this gorgeous Technicolor picturization of the Buddy DeSylva smash musical-comedy hit is packing 'em in, hot on the heels, as the saying goes, of a recent capacity week of the original cast on the stage of the National. And not only that. No sooner will this gay satire have blacked out at the Earle than it will reopen in all its splendor the following morning at the Metropolitan. That will be next Friday. Which is fair enough, because that's the kind of picture it is—colorful, gay and comic, with hit tunes by Irving Berlin to spice its livelier scenes, and the services of three of the original Broadway cast, plus Bob Hope, to make it bullet-proof. If you don't care for this one, you might as well turn yourself in.

Months Yet to Go

The season at the National, by the way, and it is Manager Edmund Plohn's word I have for it, is so solidly booked as to indicate its continuance into the early part of June. By that time—and this is my own idea—it is probable there will be enough additional touring attractions available, acts of God and war not intervening, to keep the E Street doors open even later into the summer. What! No Aborn Light Opera Company? Or don't you go back that far?

Tonight at 8:15, in Roosevelt High School Auditorium, the last of the preliminaries in the District of Columbia One-Act Play Tournament will be held, with Ward McCabe's "Children Afraid," presented by the Encore Theater of George Washington University, and the Drama Workshop of the Jewish Community Center's production of "Rope" in competition. Following these two plays, Mrs. Horace G. Torbert, Gideon A. Lyon and Ralph Fowler, judges of the preliminaries, will announce the four plays chosen to compete in the finals, at Roosevelt, next Wednesday night, March 18, at which time the local drama desks will serve as judges and make the final awards.

From Detroit, that galvanic character impressioniste, Sibyl Bowan, writes that she will be playing her annual date at Loew's Capitol, come late April. In the meantime, she is moving on to the Palace Theater, in Cleveland, this weekend, and then to Florida for a stretch prior to Washington. And do we like guava jelly? Silly question. Having once lived, in an earlier incarnation, well down below Florida, where you practically pick guava jelly off the trees every morning for breakfast, we do. However, we never eat our guava jelly until we get it!

Well, Sir, Look Who's Coming!

It was a sizable event that cast its premonitory shadow athwart the Capital yesterday, via the typewriter and special delivery stamp of the erudite Mr. Joe Holman, who throws a bit of a shadow on his own account. Mr. Holman, it seems, won't care if it becomes known that that "great film favorite of rip-roaring, wild-western cinema days of the golden 1920's, and prior to that—the one and only 'Hoot' Gibson—will be spotlighted in Col. Jim Eskew's Rodeo, which will hold forth at Riverside Stadium, April 4-12, inclusive." Despite a broken back, sustained in a plane crash awhile back, that necessitates his working with a heavy brace on his back, "Hoot" still is top man with a broncho, a rope and six-gun. More of him later, but this will do for a starter.

Jimmy Cyrano Durante, mowing 'em down at the Capitol this week, certainly keeps that old gang of his together. If you have been wondering what ever happened to that old time team of night club maniacs known by the name of Clayton, Jackson & Durante, well, there is Jimmy up there on the Capitol stage, Lou Clayton is his business manager—and has been for years—and Eddie Jackson has rejoined the current act. Dr. Durante, by the way, was cocktailed by Carter Barron and his Loew associates in the Variety Club yesterday afternoon from 4:15 on, but, as these words are being tangled Thursday at 3:30, the gusty event ain't came yet. A word about it Monday, maybe.

How to Gain Film Stardom The Hard Way

By Frederick C. Othman

United Press Hollywood Correspondent

Hollywood, March 13. — Miss Nancy Coleman, the red-haired movie actress you'll be seeing soon in such pictures as "King's Row," "Dangerously They Live" and "The Gay Sisters," is a good example of how to crack the movies—without even knowing the assistant casting director's brother-in-law.

Miss Coleman, daughter of the editor of the Everett (Wash.), Herald, knew nobody even remotely connected with the show business. Her father died when she was in her second year at Washington State University and she soon found herself running an elevator (at $16 per week) in the Emporium, San Francisco's big department store.

After a bit she sold hats to ladies—a profession that taught her forebearance—and in the fall of 1935 she applied to the National Broadcasting Co. for an audition. She'd studied dramatics in school, hadn't she? Why couldn't she take one of the roles in one of those soap operas?

So She Bought a Ticket

The broadcasting folks agreed. She got $25 for 1 hour a week, in a tragedy designed to further the sale of cooking oil. She kept the millinery department job until she had five separate radio jobs. She played small children, old ladies, Indian princesses and wronged wives, mostly in the interest of laundry soap. She saved $1000, spent nearly half of it for a de luxe ticket on a de luxe boat, and sailed via the Panama Canal for New York City. She arrived cold on a cold day. Knew nobody.

She rented a room in the Rehearsal Club, a boarding house for girls seeking stage careers, and started to do some seeking. Made the rounds of all the agents. Eventually she got the chance for a reading part of the brat in "Susan and God."

Seemed that Nancy Kelly, who'd made a hit with it, was leaving the show for the movies. Miss Coleman read the part for John Golden and Gertrude Lawrence in competition with 30-odd other actresses. She got it. She played in New York for six weeks. Then the show hit the road and first thing Miss Coleman knew, she was in San Francisco and the girls in the Emporium millinery department were saving their lunch money to buy tickets.

Arrived, but Show Didn't

She traveled throughout the United States and into Canada for the next eight months. The show closed and there was Miss Coleman in New York, jobless. She got some summer stock chores. She plugged soap on the radio and eventually, to her intense satisfaction, got the leading feminine role in the Theater Guild production of "Liberty Jones." Her name in lights, and everything. At last she was a success.

Except that the show was a flop. Lasted only three weeks. That, as it turned out, was long enough. Warner Brothers' scouts spotted her and West she came last spring. She's been busy in big-time movies ever since.

That's the story of Nancy Coleman, who didn't even know the brother-in-law of the assistant casting director. We only hope that it gives some ideas to the would-be actresses who have written of their woes to us.

HEDDA HOPPER

Probating of Wills!

Hollywood, Calif., March 13.—I watched an actor working on "Her Cardboard Lover" the other day, and he delighted my soul. His name is Chill Wills. He played a Southern judge, while Norma Shearer, Bob Taylor and George Sanders were disturbing the peace in his courtroom. In asking for silence, he became positively apoplectic. Then, as the triangle battled on, he realized there was romance mixed up in it; and he got that sly, cute look of an eavesdropper, who's listening in on somebody's domestic battle. When he finally got their attention, he was bland as a baby. Well, if you could see that scene on the screen as I saw it being taken, he'd get as many jobs as Walter Brennan. He's the same kind of man—small town, simple, can jump into anything at a moment's notice and do it in one take. He started in tent shows, then did minstrels and vaudeville. Never played on Broadway. He's a little awed by all these movie stars, and he's blessing George Cukor for giving him the best opportunity he's had on the screen.

Ann Sothern told me Roz Russell made a speech the other day and said, "When you go out to these camps, girls, never let anybody tell you to put on a uniform. They want you to look what you are—a motion picture star. Wear feminine clothes, picture hats, and veils, veils, veils! They love 'em." Which is what I've been crying for ever since Hollywood put on uniforms.

That blessed Eddie Horton, who's long since passed his springtime, has been asked to do "Springtime for Henry" in Springfield, Mass., during Easter Week for Red Cross. And if he does, it will mean he's done that play 77 weeks which is quite a record in these days of short runs.

My heart goes out to the Bing Crosbys. Their four boys are all down with the mumps!

Metro is so crazy about Bill Saroyan they're giving him his own unit—to write, direct, produce and select his own cast. The foreword to his first script is so beautifully written it should appear in our biggest magazine. It's poetry of motion in words.

Richard Whorf, just back from the East, says Lunt and Fontanne would love to do a picture if they can get the right one. They wanted to do "Escape," but Norma Shearer played that. So how about "The Sea Gull?"

"Billy" Bishop, the great Canadian flier, playing himself.

Brenda Marshall, looking unusually striking on color film, plays a nemesis to the hot-headed Cagney and the quiet, ambitious Morgan. Her role is the crux of the film's earlier half, while their reactions to her worthlessness form the climaxes of the latter portion. The pace is consistently rapid and the photography is top-notch throughout.

Metropolitan

Warner Brothers' Technicolored salute to the Royal Canadian Air Force, "Captains of the Clouds," reopened yesterday on the Metropolitan screen.

Notable for its sweeping, authentic sky scenes, the film presents James Cagney, Dennis Morgan, Alan Hale, Reginald Gardiner and George Tobias as a quintet of experienced "bush" pilots who offer their services as airmen for the country's war effort. Refused because of their age, the men react differently, but all find means of doing their part in air service. Sequences on training fields and in student planes are enormously interesting and further authenticity is added by the appearance of W. A.

Nats' Late Uprising Routs Boston Sox, 12 to 2

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

Payne Field Sarasota, Fla., March 13.—For whatever it is worth in the appraisal of Ted Williams' chances of escaping the boos of American League fans this season, the fact is that Williams was roundly applauded by Sarasota fans in his first exhibition game here. The fuss his deferment by the draft board kicked up in the North was not apparent when he made his first public appearance of the year.

POVICH

Was it a good test of the way Williams will be received this summer? The better test will come on Sunday at Tampa when the Red Sox play the Cincinnati Reds. Fifteen hundred soldiers from nearby military posts will be at that Tampa game. How will they greet Williams, who appealed from an A-1 classification to go back to his $30,000 job with the Red Sox? If they feel disposed to hoot and jeer, it may be a pretty accurate index to the general attitude toward Williams. If they applaud him the Red Sox slugger may have nothing to fear from the fans around the circuit.

In one sense it is probably Williams' tough luck that he is playing with a Boston club under the circumstances. His deferment created a furore of indignation among Boston fans that shows no signs of subsiding. But Boston probably qualifies as America's super-patriotic city where they take the flag-waving and the patriotic hoopla very seriously. In another American League town, a Williams case would be more easily shrugged off than in the Hub.

Certainly there can be no quarrel with Williams on the score of his conduct since his deferment. On his arrival in the Red Sox Camp the other day he was stampeded for 50 minutes in an interview with dozens of newspapermen and he was completely open-handed about his case. "I'm trying to be honest with everybody," he said. "I'll tell you everything I know. Nothing is off the record. My mother is sick. The only money I have saved are some annuities amounting to $8000 that I haven't paid up yet. Of this season's salary, I'll have to pay $17,500 to the Government. I'm trying to be honest with myself, in the whole thing. If I'm not doing the right thing, I guess the fans will let me know."

One Boo Will Be Heard, Says Ted

Williams is anxious about how the fans will receive him. "I want to get along with them, but I can't guarantee that I will. If there are 50,000 fans giving me a big hand and one fan booing me, the thing I hear is that boo. This is a year when I wish I had a better temper."

The consensus on the Red Sox camp is that Williams is temperamentally unfitted to combat any booing that his draft status might bring about He is a complete extravert, and that may be unfortunate. "Actions of Williams that they might overlook in other seasons are going to hurt him this year," they say. "He's got one big chance to do himself a lot of good. If he can start off having a big year, he's apt to win the fans over to his side. If he goes into an early slump, the Boston fans may be on his neck. That's human nature, of course."

Aside from being a draft case celebrity, Williams hasn't changed much. When the posse of newspapermen were looking for him on his arrival here from Minneapolis, he was out on the ball field behind the hotel boning his favorite bats and swinging at imaginary pitchers. He's a good hitter because hitting is a passion with him. He wants no part of the new-fangled batting machines in the training camps this yar. "That ain't no fun," says Williams. "I like to hit against flesh and blood and outsmart some pitcher who's trying to make me look bad."

Yawkey Intimated Enlistment to Him

Williams made an appeal to the Boston newspapermen to treat him fairly in the matter of his draft status. "I know I'm in a spot, and if you can't see my side of it, I want you to be as honest as I'm trying to be. You've been great so far," he said. "You thought I was quite a guy when I hit that home run at Detroit in the All-Star game last summer. Well, that seems like a pretty small thing to me right now. It's pretty unimportant compared to this draft board thing."

Red Sox Owner Tom Yawkey intimated to Williams several weeks ago that it might be the wise thing for him to enlist in the Army. There was even supposed to be an arrangement whereby Millionaire Yawkey would make good to the lad the money he would forfeit on his baseball contract. Yawkey even arranged with Mickey Cochrane to take Williams on tour through the Great Lakes Naval Station with the hope that Williams would be sufficiently impressed to enlist.

"But I couldn't tell him to enlist any more than I could tell a man to get married," said Yawkey. "He's making his own decision about his immediate future. He's always been a pretty good boy thus far, and whatever step he takes now I know it will be the honest one."

Joe at 'Home' for $42,000—Yanks Now Happy Family

DiMaggio Takes Things Easy On First Day in Uniform

By Judson Bailey

Associated Press Sports Writer

St. Petersburg, Fla., March 13.—The world champion New York Yankees were one big happy family again today as Joltin' Joe DiMaggio cavorted in a Yankee uniform for the first time this spring.

The long, lean centerfielder, who came to an agreement last night on a $42,000 salary for the forthcoming season to make him the highest paid player now in baseball, pranced around in "pepper" games, shagged balls at shortstop, third base and in the outfield. He crowded a lot of work into the two hours before the Yanks began an exhibition game with the Cincinnati Reds.

Manager Joe McCarthy did not risk his valuable bric-a-brac by letting him pinch hit or even carry out the starting line-up to the umpires, but the impetus given the world champions by getting their holdout problems straightened out was noticeable.

Same Old Yanks

The Yankees looked hale and hearty and their swagger told more eloquently than words that they believed they would be a cinch to remain at the top of the American League.

The Yanks will have a couple of changes—Buddy Hassett at first base and Gerry Priddy at third—but essentially they expect to be about the same caliber as last season when they clinched the pennant at the earliest date in history.

They have the same pitchers, with added age offset by an infusion of youth; the same catchers, the same superb sluggers in the outfield and the greatest second base combination in the game today. With an array like DiMaggio, Keller, Henrich, Gordon, Rizzuto, Dickey and the rest, the club probably could play a couple of humpty-dumpties on the fringes and finish ahead of most of their rivals.

Tigers Sell Billy Sullivan To Dodgers

Lakeland, Fla., March 13.—The Detroit Tigers today reduced their holdouts to four by sending Catcher Billy Sullivan to the Brooklyn Dodgers for an undisclosed amount of cash. General Manager Jack Zeller of the Tigers completed the transaction with Larry MacPhail, of the Dodgers, by telephone.

At the same time the Tigers called up Al Unser, veteran minor league receiver, from their Beaumont farm club of the Texas League to replace Sullivan behind George (Birdie) Tebbetts and Dixie Parsons, other catchers in camp.

Sullivan, whose salary reportedly was halved from the 1941 figure of $12,000, failed to report this spring, but remained at his home at Sarasota. The 31-year-old Chicagoan, whose father and namesake once made baseball history with the White Sox, came to the Tigers in 1940 from the St. Louis Browns in exchange for Pitcher George Coffman and shared in Detroit's pennant victory.

He had seen previous service with Chicago and Cleveland in the American League and Cincinnati in the National League.

Rider Hurt, Horse Dies In Friday the 13th Spill

Jockey Arcaro Suffers Bruised Arm As 4 Horses Go Down; Royal Man Killed

By the Associated Press

Miami, March 13.—Friday the thirteenth landed a load of its hard luck on Tropical Park's feature race today, leaving Eddie Arcaro with a badly bruised arm, two other jockeys with minor injuries, and a ranking handicap horse dead, the result of a disastrous four-horse spill.

The spectacular accident happened during the running of the Indian River Handicap, just as the field was swinging into the stretch turn. The four horses piled up in a break leaving only five to finish the mile and a sixteenth trip, which Sir Marlboro, an 8-1 outsider, won by two lengths.

Arcaro, the Kentucky riding wizard who has been mixing good luck with a heaping portion of bad the last seven months, was aboard the favorite, Boston Man, from Mrs. H. T. Archibald's barn. He was forcing Sir Marlboro's pace all the way down the backstretch, when suddenly he seemed to falter. He dropped back, then fell.

Royal Man Trips

Harold S. Clark's Royal Man, close behind, tripped next, carrying Nick Wall, the little Boston rider, down. Then Wexler and Shagrin's Red Dock and George Brooks' Cadmium stumbled onto the pile.

Billie Thompson, another Kentuckian, was riding Cadmium, and suffered a wrenched back. Wall came out with a sore spine. Only Sterling Young, New Orleans-born booter, was unscathed.

They loaded Arcaro into an ambulance and took him to Jackson Memorial Hospital for an X-ray on his arm. Three of the horses were able to get up. The fourth, 5-year-old Royal Man, owned by a Miami businessman and winner of $21,035 last year, had a broken leg and was destroyed.

Arcaro "Hot"

The mishap occurred just as Arcaro was going "hot" in the winter campaigning. He had been out of action nearly six months, ever since he was set down for rough riding in the Hopeful Stakes at Saratoga last August.

Coming back with the new year, he proceeded to win the $25,000 Flamingo aboard Requested and the $50,000 Widener riding The Rhymer. At the moment he is well up front in the race for the winter's riding honors in Florida.

Sir Marlboro, an aging bay, led from end to end of the race, with the help of the spill and was going away at the finish under Don Meade's handling, galloping the mile and a sixteenth in 1:43 3-5 and rewarding his backers at $18.80 for $2.

Meade replaced Wall aboard the latter's mount, J. Marsch's Bulldinger, in the next race and made it two in a row as he booted the son of Bulldog home.

Johnny Colan TKO Winner Over Webb

By Jack Cuddy

United Press Sports Writer.

New York, March 13.—Johnny Colan, a battering buzz-saw from New York's Hell's Kitchen, clinched a title shot with Light-heavyweight Champion Gus Lesnevich by scoring a technical knockout tonight over Jimmy Webb, of St. Louis, in the second round after flooring him five times in that session.

Referee Billy Cavanagh stopped the bout at 1:58 of the second round, while 8000 fans shook Madison Square Garden's girders with their cheers for the husky, brown-haired Italian lad who was born about five blocks away from the house that Rickard built.

Webb, who held Colan to an 8-round draw just a month ago—on another Friday-the-thirteenth, was on his knees for the fifth time as a result of Colan's whirlwind onslaught, when the referee intervened. The bout had been slated for 12 rounds. Cavanagh gave Webb two more knockdowns than he was entitled to under the New York boxing code, which provides that a non-title bout must be stopped when a man has been floored three times in one round.

No Question to Outcome

Although betting had been even because of their close fight on February 13, there was no question as to the bout's outcome after the first few seconds of the first round—as husky Johnny tore after his man. Webb weathered this first session, but was dropped to his knees for the count of two by a hard right hook early in the second. He rose and a series of hooks to the head put him on his knees and elbows in midring for the count of seven. Another barrage sent him to his knees for another seven count. He was scarcely on his feet when a whistling left hook dropped him on his knees for the fourth time for a five count. Jimmy rose again, but Johnny's hammering hooks to the chin dropped him almost immediately. He was trying to struggle up at the count of eight when Cavanagh stepped in.

Colan showed much more ability tonight than in his last tussle with Webb. He had a weight advantage of 175 pounds to 172½ over his opponent, but said he could come in under the 175-pound limit without difficulty for Lesnevich.

"I got hit with something early in the second round," Webb said, "and I don't remember anything after that. I don't remember being on the floor once. I had planned to make a long fight of it and started off slow. But he bulled me too much and I left an opening. I think I'll go back to Texas and take a rest awhile, working at my old business of operating movie machines in theaters."

Eagles Blank Johnstown By 3-0 Count

By Jack Munhall

Perhaps Friday the 13th and a blackout provided the inspiration but Goalie Craig McClelland finally turned in a shutout for the Washington Eagles last night. His perfect performance enabled the Eagles to defeat the Johnstown Blue Birds, 3-0, for a successful start in the United States Association championship playoffs at Riverside Stadium.

Narrowly balked in his shut-out efforts half a dozen times, either by long "sneak" shots or desperate last minute whacks, McClelland clearly deserved this honor and 2496 fans gave him a grand ovation at the end.

Among other things this unusually fast match saw a goal judge assaulted by a fan for the first time in the three years of local hockey. Judge Phil Dean was struck by a grey-haired, noncommissioned Army officer in the second period after ruling "no goal" on a close Washington shot. The blow was not hard and was delivered against the side of Dean's head as he sat with his back turned to the stands. A police officer ordered the offending soldier to another section, but soon afterward he returned to his original seat.

Visitors Lack Men

Piece de resistance of McClelland's spotless performance in the nets came midway of the opening period when in quick succession he turned back three straight shots by All-League Center Hank Dyck, all delivered at a range of shorter than 10 feet.

After that, the short-handed Blue Birds worried McClelland surprisingly little, as his Washington mates checked closely. McClelland was credited with 27 saves as he bested Frank Ceryance, the crack Johnstown goalie, who recently was voted by coaches and sports writers as the Eastern Amateur League's most valuable player. It was the first shutout here by an Eagles goalie since Leith Dickie, since departed, blanked River Vale, 1 to 0 December 9.

8th-Inning Spree Earns Seven Runs

Scarborough, Sundra And Masterson Hurl 7-Hit Game; Case Triples in Exhibition

By Shirley Povich

Post Staff Writer

Sarasota, Fla., March 13.—The Nats' behavior today was completely inconsistent and also very amazing. For six innings they couldn't stir up any semblance of a hit against the Boston Red Sox. In the seventh they tied the score, 2 to 2. In the eighth they put the slug on the Boston pitching with a seven-run inning. They won the ball game finally, 12 to 2.

Washington's dozen runs came pouring across the plate in the last three innings against the pitching of Mace Brown and Emerson Dickman. They were powered by 14 hits, 8 of them in the big eighth inning when George Case contributed a hefty three-bagger with the bases full.

It was the Nats' fourth victory in their five exhibition games to date.

A Mound Lesson

Rookie Ray Scarborough, the high school teacher who is trying for a job with the Nats, gave up Boston's two runs during his two-inning pitching performance. He forced both of them across the plate in the fifth inning when he gave four bases on balls.

When Scarborough wasn't pitching, Steve Sundra and Walter Masterson were doing a very good job for the Nats on the mound. Sundra held the Sox runless for three innings, allowing only two hits, and Masterson gave up only three hits in pitching the last four scoreless innings of the Boston club.

With the departure of Pitcher Joe Dobson from the mound at the end of five innings, the Nats' fortunes began to improve. Dobson issued three bases on balls, but no hits at all, and the Nats also went hitless against the veteran ex-National Leaguer, Brown in the sixth.

Brown Belted

But after Galle popped out, the rally flared anew. Repass drew a walk and Pofahl's single scored Vernon. Walter Masterson beat out a bunt that brought Early home, and left the bases filled. Then it was that Case cleared them with his second hit of the inning, a lengthy triple between left and center.

They picked up three more runs in the ninth, just in case. They scored on singles by Campbell, Vernon and Galle, and three walks were issued by the completely ineffective Brown.

Nats vs. Braves

The Nats moved back to Orlando tonight after their three-day road trip, but tomorrow they play the Braves at nearby Sanford . . . Jimmy Pofahl figured in three of the Nats' four double plays today and is bulking as a serious rival to sore-armed Frank Croucher for the second-base job . . . When Walter Masterson beat out a bunt to Cronin today he was probably getting his quota of hits for the season. . . . Accused of being the worst hitter in baseball, Masterson cracked, "You ought to see my brother" . . . Ted Williams went to bat three times today, drew a walk, popped up and hit safely . . . Cronin is playing third base for the Red Sox in the absence of Jim Tabor, who has been incapacitated for a week with a bruised heel . . . The Red Sox were not too perturbed by Dickman's horrible pitching performance today . . . He's joining the Navy next week . . . Catchers Jake Early and Johnny Peacock tiffed today after Peacock accused Early of interference . . . There were loud words and bellicose glares, but nothing else.

Terps' President Drops Hint on Shaughnessy

President H. C. Byrd of the University of Maryland last night dropped an unmistakable hint that perhaps Clark Shaughnessy, the Stanford "miracle" football coach, is coming to College Park after all.

Byrd who steadfastly refuses to deny or confirm reports that Shaughnessy will supplant Jack Faber as head grid iron boss for the Terps, may have tipped his hand by doubting Shaughnessy had, as reported yesterday by the Associated Press, declared he wouldn't leave Stanford "for Yale or Maryland, or any other school."

"I don't believe he said anything of the kind," Byrd blurted out.

A little later in his telephone conversation with The Post, Byrd hedged a little on that quick comment, saying "maybe he did say it, but I don't think so . . . I don't think he is saying anything about this matter."

Byrd's reticence to discuss Shaughnessy's possible coming to College Park is not difficult to understand, for the Maryland president insists to this day that premature publicity killed a deal which was to have brought Harvard's Dick Harlow to Maryland before last season.

Bethesda Five Bows in Title Duke Tourney

Special Dispatch to The Post

Durham, N. C., March 13.—For the third consecutive year, Bethesda-Chevy Chase High's cagemen were a first-round victim in the Duke-Durham Southern Scholastic Basketball Championships here today, losing a 35-30 decision to Durham High's Bulldogs after a futile last-half rally.

The Bethesdans, only representative from the Washington, D. C., area in the tourney since Roosevelt High's defending champions were refused permission to play by school heads, cut a 7-point deficit to 3 points in the last minute, but that was their limit.

It was the second clash of the annual "Tournament of Champions." In the first, Columbia (S. C.) High scored an upset over Greensboro (N. C.) High, 37-30. A stunning surprise came shortly afterward when the Bulldogs of Burgin (Ky.) High smashed top-seeded John Marshall, of Richmond, 52-39. The final first-round clash went to Greenville (N. C.) by 38-28 over Newport News (Va.) High.

Fight on Even Terms

In second-round games tonight Burgin and Durham High fives earned a meeting in tomorrow night's final game, the first with a 40-34 margin over third-seeded Greenville, and the second with a smashing 60-29 triumph over Co-

Bethesda's loss was the direct result of a slow start and the superior height and weight of the home town five, titlist in 1939 and 1940. The

L. Mangrum Sweeps Golf In Palm Beach

By the Associated Press

Palm Beach, Fla., March 13.—Lloyd Mangrum, youthful Chicago professional, swept the boards in the $4350 Victory Golf Tournament today by taking first prize in the 36-hole medal competition and teaming with Poloist Michael G. Phipps to win the pro-amateur.

Mangrum added a 67, just one over the course record, to his first day's 70 and the 36-hole 137 was good for the $400 first prize.

Phipps, playing with a 10-hole handicap, helped his partner on four holes.

East Potomac Pro Job to Al Jamison

After a brief conference with S. G. Leoffler, public links concessionaire, Al Jamison, former Indian Spring and Bradley Hills golf professional, yesterday took over the teaching post at East Potomac golf course left vacant by the resignation of Cliff Spencer late last year.

According to Leoffler, Jamison is not under contract but will "remain at the job as long as he makes good."

A native of Wilmington, Dela., Jamison first appeared on the local golfing scene as assistant to Tony Sylvester at Bannockburn. Later he was assistant to Al Houghton and then Wiffy Cox at Kenwood Country Club, after which he moved to Indian Spring as head pro. Before taking the East Potomac post he had served two years at Bradley Hills' new layout.

Navy Rifle, Pistol, Fencing Teams See Action Today

By the Associated Press

Annapolis, Md., March 13.—Navy's rifle, pistol and fencing teams hold forth tomorrow in the feature events of a six-sport program at the Naval Academy.

While the up-and-coming gymnasts compete in the Eastern Intercollegiate meet at Temple and the wrestlers continue their bid for Eastern titles at Penn State, the riflemen oppose Lehigh, the fencers, Columbia, and the pistolmen, Cornell.

Plebe teams are scheduled in three events, William Penn Charter School of Philadelphia sending its swordsmen here and Lehigh's frosh rifle team and the Tulsa (Okla.) Central High School wrestlers comprising the other invading squads.

Pair Deadlock In Shoot Event

St. Petersburg, Fla., March 13 (AP). Dwight E. Kleist, 21-year-old rifleman from Souderton, Pa., and W. P. Schweitzer, of Hillside, N. J., today were tied for the national aggregate in the annual national midwinter small-bore rifle tournament at the close of the third day's shooting.

An additional event was fired, however, and a change is likely in the standings when checking of the targets is completed tomorrow.

Kleist, who dominated the first two days of firing with the only possible 400's, was off his pace today as the field of 70-odd riflemen shot off four more events.

Md. Tracks Asked to Give 95 Per Cent of Profit to War Effort

Proposal Set Before Body By Hockley

Maryland Commission Chairman Broaches Plan to the State's 4 Major Track Heads

By the Associated Press

Baltimore, March 13.—Chester F. Hockley, chairman of the Maryland Racing Commission, proposed today that Maryland tracks contribute 95 per cent of their net profits to the Nation's war effort for the duration.

Hockley broached his plan to representatives of the State's four major tracks at a meeting which he called and said he intended also to obtain the reaction of the heads of the five minor tracks.

He said he desired to determine Maryland opinion on the proposal before leaving for the national meeting of racing commissioners at Chicago next week, when a unified war effort program for racing will be discussed.

Vanderbilt Favors Move

Under Hockley's proposal the tracks would make their contributions to war relief agencies of their own choosing. He said Alfred G. Vanderbilt, Maryland Jockey Club president, had told him he personally favored the move.

M. Hampton Magruder, president of the Bowie track, said that subject to the approval of stockholders, he favored contributing 50 per cent of the track's net profits.

Pending consultation with other members opinions were withheld by Harry Parr 3d and Matt Daiger, of Pimlico; Maj. Goss L. Stryker and Luke O'Brien, of Laurel, and James Ross, of Havre de Grace.

Commissioners Frank Small and Georges Mahoney also attended the meeting.

Overlin Cancels Two Bouts Due to Fractured Thumb

By the Associated Press

Newark, N. J., March 13.—A fractured right thumb tonight forced Ken Overlin, former middleweight boxing champion, to cancel two matches.

The first bout would have pitted Ken against Wild Bill McDowell, of Paterson at Laurel Garden, Newark, Monday night and the other was with Booker Beckwith of Chicago at the Windy City on March 25.

Overlin, who came here for treatment, said he suffered the injury last Wednesday in his winning bout against Paul Mahoney at Buffalo, N. Y.

Dartmouth Plays Penn State Five In East's Play-Off

New Orleans, March 13 (AP).—Dartmouth will meet Pennsylvania State and Illinois plays Kentucky in the opening round of the National Collegiate Athletic Association playoff for the Eastern basketball championship at Tulane University here March 20.

The winners of the two games will meet the next night, March 21, to decide the team which plays the winner of the Western tournament for the national championship at Kansas City a week later.

The drawings were made today by Dr. Wilbur C. Smith, athletic director of Tulane and tournament chairman.

Selections at Tropical Park

Dear Al:

I went out to Bowie yesterday and visited with the boys. The track is all shined up for the meeting opening on April 1. Plenty of horses already on the scene and workout time in the morning is a busy period. The electric starting gate is in the paddock and will be moved over to the 6-furlong chute tomorrow and horsemen will be able to school their charges from the stalls. Speaking of starting gates, the Puett gate people are coming out with a starting outfit that has one feature that is a honey. Instead of the gates flying open, they slide back slowly and enter the partition between the stalls. This will do away with accidents caused by horses hitting the wire tops of the gates. Another feature has been added. In the rear of each horse will be an air hose. When the gates open, this air will blow on the horses and, despite the fact that it sounds funny, serves to get the horses away from the gate. The new features of this gate have been made only after experiments with all kinds of horses and my informant says they really work 100 per cent. I understand patents have been obtained on these features so I'm not letting any birds out of the bag. However, I was writing about Bowie. Everybody's friend, Dynamite Kerr, is on the scene. He wintered at the track and has only one horse, Dizzy Dame. He has given away Playmore and that horse will be used for saddle purposes. Dynamite has his three dogs, has been living in a tack room all winter without a worry and I'm jealous of him. Alan Clarke is busy with his five-horse stable, which includes Walter Haight, the 3-year-old colt. Like the guy he was named for, Walter Haight is eating everything in sight and, according to his groom, the colt is a screwball. Perhaps there's a reason. By the way, Dynamite says there are only 18 days until Bowie opens and there have been 103 days since Bowie closed. BILL.

First race—QUEEN ECHO seems the best suited of the sprinters gathered for this 6-furlong event. Needs only the right ride. MILLMORE shapes up well in this field and will be dangerous. ROYAL BLUE for the show end.

Second race — HIGHBOROUGH finds a field that seems to fit his purposes. I see no reason for this one to make mistakes. CHALET belongs close in this company. LOOKOUT RASCAL to take care of the others.

Third race—AIRSPRING is recommended by good trials and could be the right one in a rather open race. PORTABLE'S last was encouraging and this one promises to be in the thick of contention MIXER to take care of the minor award.

Fourth race—TOPEE is the class of this field, but a hard one to guess. I believe I have picked the right spot and I hope the stable agrees with me. BANKER JIM is going to awaken with a bang and this should be the spot. STIMULI to take care of the others.

Fifth race—INCOMING is ready to turn back this kind. Needs only the right handling. The entry of CHALBELLE and WAR MELODY is formidable and belongs in the first flight. ALCHORT is a possibility.

Sixth race—The entry of WISE BOB and JOE BERGER promises to do a lot of running in this field. I'm placing my chief hopes in Wise Boo, of course. ALL GOOD and REGAL BOY may account for the place and show awards.

Seventh race—HE MAN has been threatening to win a race of this kind and I'm going to pick this as the right spot. HILLBLOND was never better and belongs in the first flight. FANCY FREE won last out and is a threat.

Eighth race—LAZARUS likes the route and is as fit as hands make horses. Looks like the right one in this event. FRENCH TRAP and KENTY MISS to take care of the others.

Best bet—AIRSPRING.

McLaughlin, Doherty Win A. A. U. Bouts

The semifinal round of the District A. A. U. boxing tournament at Turner's Arena last night turned out to be one of the best amateur fistic shows of the season.

Some 1000 fans who braved the blackout and a Friday-the-thirteenth jinx were treated to a 20-second knockout in the nightcap event of the 13-bout card, and also witnessed a flyweight scrap that, for sheer ferocity, would put a lot of the present crop of professional pugs to shame.

The quick kayo, which probably set something of a local record for speedy fistic anasthesia, was engineered by big Joe McLaughlin, the Prince Georges County heavyweight, at the expense of Bill Barber, of the Apollo Club. Big Mac jumped across the ring at the gong, feinted twice with his left, and then whipped a right to the jaw that put the lights out for Barber.

The next-to-final battle also ended on a slumber note when Warren (Red) Doherty, of Knights of Columbus, upset Reno Werkman, the Golden Gloves 175-pound king, after 35 seconds of the second frame. Doherty, the former Columbus University scrapper, dropped the St. Mary's lad for a nine count in the first round with a flurry of rights.

Corbin in Finals

Johnny Corbin, W. B. C.'s 118-pounder, fought his way to the tournament finals last night, but he was forced to put up the finest scrap of the evening to take a split decision from Benny Rodill, the Merrick Club's mighty mite.

This brawl was fast from the first bell and both youngsters were pouring it on with both hands. The taller Corbin forced the pace in the opener, but Rodill's counterpunching on the ropes was a caution. If this little Filipino is an example, it is easy to understand the success of MacArthur's scouts!

If possible, the second canto was even more slashing than the opener and Rodill began to force the attack with Corbin valiantly repelling with both fists.

Late in the final session both boys tired badly, but Corbin continued to bore in and had Rodill backed on the ropes. The judges disagreed on the decision, and Referee Eddie Lafond cast his vote for Corbin.

Espino Wins Upset

George Espino, of National Training School, sprung something of an upset when he decisioned Tony DiToto in a senior lightweight match. Espino used a heavy southpaw to advantage all the way through, and he had DiToto's face a bit on the gory side in the third round.

Another tough bout saw stumpy little Jimmy Caraway, the Prince Georges 112-pounder, take a close one from Win McCaffery in the opener. By virtue of this win, Caraway will meet Gilly Smithson for the novice title.

SENIOR CLASS

112 pounds—Darryl Smithson (Apollo) decisioned Manny Silverman (W. B. C.).
112 pounds—John Corbin (W. B. C.) decisioned Benny Rodill (Red Shield).
135 pounds—George Espina (N. T. S.) decisioned Tony Di Toto (Police).
147 pounds—Nick Latalos (St. Mary's) decisioned Tom Hollen (Apollo).
175 pounds—Warren Doherty (K. C.) knocked out Reno Workman (St. Mary's), 35 seconds, second round.
Heavyweight—Joe McLaughlin (Prince Georges) knocked out Bill Barber (Apollo), 20 seconds, first round.

NOVICE CLASS

112 pounds—Jimmy Caraway (Prince Georges) decisioned Win McCafferty (N. T. S.).
118 pounds—Bill Gautier (Brookland) decisioned Bill Hedges (N. T. S.).
126 pounds—Bill Speiser (W. B. C.) decisioned Curtiss Harris (W. B. C.).
147 pounds—Ebel Marty (W. B. C.) decisioned Johnny Atkinson (Olympic).
147 pounds—George McKenzie (Apollo) decisioned Norman O'Neill (Merrick).
160 pounds—Alex Sinegal (St. Mary's) decisioned Fred Eberman (Merrick).

Tennis Courts To Open Today

Twelve hard-surface tennis courts in East Potomac Park will be opened to the public this morning for the first time this season, the Welfare and Recreational Association announced today. Until the end of this month the courts will be open weekends only.

So far as is known now, all courts operated by the association last year will be in service this season, although it is possible that some of the space may later be required for national defense purposes.

Other courts operated by the association, including six new clay courts in East Potomac Park, ten courts at Sixteenth and Kennedy Streets Northwest and six in Rock Creek Park, will open in about four weeks, according to the present schedule.

Reservations for play in East Potomac Park may be made one week in advance.

Brewers in Final League Struggle

The American Professional Basketball League campaign ends tonight for the Washington Brewers. They journey to Philadelphia to meet the champion Philly Sphas.

The Brewers bowed to Wilmington Blue last Thursday, 35-34, in Wilmington, and with that defeat went the Brewers' hope for the second-half flag.

Wilmington sewed up the entire league championship, having previously captured the first half.

Coach Mack Posnak bemoaned the fact that Nat Frankel, his star forward and scorer, was absent from the Wilmington game, but Frankel will be ready for the District pro championship series with the Lichtman Bears next Saturday and Sunday at Turner's Arena.

Gopher Gunners Lead Trapshoot

Boonville, Mo., March 13 (AP).—Minnesota University took the lead in the advanced R. O. T. C. division of the thirteenth annual indoor Camp Perry trapshoot today with 741 points.

Creighton University, of Omaha, was second with 722, and the University of Nebraska was third with 694.

L.I.U.'s Holub Cited by Coach, Captain of G.U.

Dick Holub, Long Island University center, is the only mutual choice on Georgetown University All-Opponent basketball teams for 1941-42 picked by Coach Elmer Ripley and retiring Capt. Buddy O'Brady. The selections were published in the Hoya, Georgetown student paper.

Matt Zunic, high-scoring George Washington forward, was picked by O'Grady, but ignored by Coach Ripley, who was quoted as saying that Joe Gallagher was the best Colonial player against Georgetown this season.

Both Ripley and O'Grady chose Holub as the best center in collegiate basketball.

Ripley's team:

O'Grady's team:

Forwards, Senesky, St. Joseph's; Musi, Temple; guards, Zunic, George Washington; Thomas, Scranton; center, Holub.

MacMitchell Faces Dodds Again Tonight

By the Associated Press

New York, March 13.—The mile run, just another event on this season's indoor track programs until Gil Dodds nosed out Leslie MacMitchell two weeks ago, returns to its top billing tomorrow night at the Knights of Columbus games in Madison Square Garden.

Four runners are slated to toe the mark in the Columbia mile, but the race figures to be strictly a duel between Dodds, the divinity student from the Boston A. A. and MacMitchell, New York University senior. Gene Venzke, who, a few years ago, was prominent in all miles, and Jim R

Los Angeles, March 13.—Manager Jimmy Dykes sent three of his younger Chicago White Sox pitchers against the Chicago Cubs today and the results were not encouraging. The Cubs won, 13 to 3.

At least part of the National Leaguers' score was attributable to five Sox errors, but the Sox showed that Ed Welland, Orval Grove and Joe Haynes had given up 16 hits, while three Cub hurlers allowed only seven.

Stan Hack collected three hits in five times at bat. Lou Stringer got two for two and knocked in three runs.

Lakeland, Fla., March 13 (AP).—The St. Louis Cardinals took advantage of seven bases on balls issued by Lefty Hal Newhouser to defeat the Detroit Tigers, 4 to 1, today in the opening Grapefruit League baseball game here.

The Cards got to Newhouser in the third inning for three runs, an ample working margin for Rookie Matthew Surkont and John Beazley and the veteran Bill Lohrman, acquired from the New York Giants, who scattered nine Detroit hits. Paul (Dizzy) Trout, who finished for Detroit, yielded only one hit and an unearned run in five innings.

Sinkwich and Trippi Tangle in Windup Of Spring Grid Training at Athens

By the Associated Press

Athens, Ga., March 13.—"Greater than Frankie Sinkwich," yodeled some University of Georgia partisans when Charley Trippi tore the turf in spring training—and tomorrow the Wilkes-Barre (Pa.) freshman gets his chance to convince the skeptics.

He'll be measured by ann All-America yardstick, for when Coach Wallace Butts winds up drills for the Orange Bowl champions with Georgia's annual "G-day" game, Trippi will be directly opposite Frankie, the fireball. Both are to play tailback—the position from which broken-jaw Frankie fought his way to All-America honors as a junior last season—and no less than 1500 goggle-eyed students and alumni are expected to pile into Sanford Stadium to see what's what.

Trippi, a sophomore next fall, gets a couple of breaks. The squad division between Sinky's "Red" team and Trippi's "Whites" gives the talented newcomer the equivalent of a first-team line from tackle to tackle. At end he'll have a chance to test Butt's experiment in moving up two pass-snatching halfbacks, "Race-Hoss" Lamar Davis and Farrar Vickery.

Tainter Plays Garman in Golf Finals

By the Associated Press

St. Augustine, Fla., March 13.—Defending Champion Georgia Tainter and Mary Jane Garman squeezed into the finals of the Florida East Coast Women's Golf Tournament today by turning back two of Georgia's brightest stars.

Miss Tainter, of Fargo, N. Dak., defeated Southern Champion Louise Suggs, of Lithia Springs, Ga., 2 up, and Miss Garman, Sarasota amateur titleholder, eked out a 1-up decision over Georgia State Champion Dorothy Kirby, of Atlanta.

Both matches were undecided until the last putt plopped into the hole of the eighteenth green.

As expected, the Tanter-Suggs match was a thriller all the way. From the seventh green on there wasn't a hole halved. Miss Tainter held a 1-up lead after the first nine, but her opponent squared the match on the tenth and went ahead on the next green.

Miss Tainter won the twelfth and thirteenth with pars to take the lead, but Miss Suggs dropped a 20-footer on the fourteenth to square matters. Miss Suggs went one down when her second shot hit a tree approaching the fifteenth, but won the next hole when Miss Tainter trapped her tee shot.

With the match standing square again, two poor shots cost Miss Suggs the match. On the seventeenth and again on the eighteenth she topped her second shots to drop both holes.

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

New York, March 13.—Don't get the idea that the whole country is up in arms about draft difficulties of Ted Williams and the holdout disturbances that were caused or are being caused by Joe DiMaggio, Buck Newsom, Whit Wyatt, etc.

CONSIDINE

Here's a letter from a sergeant at Camp Livingston, La., which speaks for itself:

"You're right for lambasting the baseball moguls, and not all of us in the service feel hurt by the fact that certain fellows, like Williams, have been given the opportunity to earn a few American dollars before joining up. We think it's a dirty shame for the baseball owners to use the national defense as an alibi for underpaying deserving players.

"And as for DiMaggio, we think he's worth at least $100,000 a year to the Yankees, and more than that to the U. S. A. Why? Some summer afternoon just take a walk through the Yankee Stadium and ask the out-of-town fans for the reason for their presence at that particular game. Just ask!"

A new record for confidence has been set by my favorite basketball team, West Texas State College, of dear Old Canyon, Tex.

Recently the boys got out a nice dossier of their amazing giants, and printed the list of victories the team had scored—up to March 2. Then, beneath that, there is this legend:

"National Metropolitan Intercollegiate Tournament.
"March 17—Buffs (W. T. S. C.) vs. Blank.
"March 19—Buffs vs. Blank.
"March 23—Buffs vs. Blank.
"March 25—Buffs vs. Blank."

In other words, West Texas not only was presupposing itself into the tournament, at the time the dossier went to press, but it has seen fit to type-set its way into the finals.

Deeper into the dossier, one reads:

"For modesty is typically Western. The statistics speak for themselves. Victories over such teams as the University of Arkansas, Pittsburgh Teachers, Oklahoma Aggies, Evansville College, De Paul University, St. Joseph's College and the other eight members of the Border Conference are eloquent.

"Add the championship of the Border Conference and of the Oklahoma City Invitation tournament, garnish with national rating No. 1 or No. 2 and you have quite a dish. That's not to speak of Price Brookfield's 507 points this season, including 44 points in a single game, nor of the high scoring power of every starter and of the reserves.

"It seems that nature made the Buffs tall, Coach Al Baggett made them skillful, and the sports writers insisted on making them famous. This combination ought to be a publicity man's delight, and it is. Few coaches have the insight, patience and cooperative spirit which mark Baggett as an unusual man."

Red Rolfe suffered terribly from that colitis all last season. He was sick throughout the World Series, but stayed in there and played fine ball. Red wants to be a sportswriter, of all things. He'd be happy to get a job with a metropolitan paper tomorrow and travel with the Yankees or another big league team.

He's a very good writer, and powerfully keen. The Daily Worker, the Communist paper, played a kind of dirty trick on him a couple of years ago. Knowing of his interest in sports writing, the paper offered him a daily baseball column. Red was delighted, until he found out just what the Daily Worker was. But even then he persevered, so interested was he in writing.

The Daily Worker enjoyed the contact, too. It was the first time it could come right out and call one of its staff men Red.

Navy Fitness Coaches Open School Term

By the Associated Press

Annapolis, Md., March 13.—The United States Naval Academy announced today plans have been completed for the Navy's first "V-5 instructors' class," composed of 200 of the Nation's top-ranking athletic coaches and physical fitness experts who have been sworn in as Naval Reserve officers.

Rear Admiral John R. Beardall, academy superintendent, said the men, to become physical instructors for future naval aviation cadets, will commence a four-week indoctrination course March 23.

Following their instruction, the coaches will be assigned to air cadet reception centers at St. Mary's College, Oakland, Calif.; the University of Iowa, the University of North Carolina, or the University of Georgia. Later they will send air cadets through a "toughening-up process" prior to transfer to schools for advanced flying instruction.

The first "V-5" class will be succeeded at monthly intervals by three others. Approximately 800 physical instructors will be available for active duty by mid-July, while the first class of air cadets will not be received until late May.

Although academy officials have not received an official list of the men who will inaugurate the "V-5" program, Maj. Bernie Bierman, United States Marine Corps, former University of Minnesota football coach, will be a member of the class and has been in Annapolis for a week laying the groundwork for the arrival of the others.

Bierman will be director of athletics at the Cadet School at the University of Iowa.

Penn State Grabs Lead In Mat Meet

By the Associated Press

State College, Pa., March 13.—Qualifying seven of its eight entries for tomorrow's semifinals, Penn State took an unexpected lead in the quarter-finals of the Eastern Intercollegiate Wrestling Championships tonight.

Not far behind, however, was the pre-tourney favorite, Pennsylvania, and a surprisingly strong Army team, each with five semifinalists.

Navy, considered a possibility for team laurels, sent four men along as did Princeton, last year's cochampion with Yale. Cornell placed three men, Lehigh two, and Columbia and Syracuse one each.

Penn State also took the lead in point scoring by notching three points by falls. Penn, Princeton, Cornell and Army listed two points each while single markers were gained by Lehigh, Syracuse and Columbia.

Despite the advantages gained by the Nittany Lions, the bouts indicated a wide-open scramble for the team championship in tomorrow's matches.

Charley Ridenour, Penn State's 121-pound king, had little trouble in defeating Sheridan Bannon of Lehigh. Warren Taylor, Princeton's 1941 titlist at 136, trounced Army's Wendell Bevan. Mickey Bennett of Navy, last year's 155-pound ruler, won from Frank McKenna of Lehigh and Dick di Battista, Penn's 175-pound champion, stopped Arthur Emerson of Navy.

2-Way Fight For Big Ten Swim Title

Ann Arbor, Mich., March 13 (AP).—A well-balanced and inspired Ohio State swimming team battled favored Michigan on better-than-even terms through four grueling hours of qualifying heats here tonight, and promised a sizzling two-way fight for the Big Ten championship tomorrow. The Buckeyes placed 13 men in the finals to Michigan's 14.

Smooth-stroking Jack Ryan paced the surprisingly powerful Ohio State squad with first place times in both the 220 and 440-yard free events.

Finishing behind the leaders were Minnesota with nine qualifiers; Iowa with six; Northwestern, five; Purdue, two, and Chicago one.

Coach Matt Mann's highly touted free-style relay team finished first with 3:35.7, but the time was well short of the conference record of 3:22.4.

Johnny Patten, of Michigan, regarded before the meet as the best 220-yard free-styler in the conference, got no better than second in this event, posting a time slower than Jack Ryan, of the Buckeyes.

Ohio State qualified three of the six finalists in the 220, Don Schnabel and Steve Grimm, both finishing in the money. Patten carried the Michigan laurels alone.

Peoples Drug Sales Set Peak Of $27,707,675

The annual statement of Peoples Drug Stores, Inc., yesterday showed record sales of $27,707,675 in 1941 and net income of $1,109,509, equivalent to $2.26 a share. This compared with $23,979,909 sales in 1940 and net income of $1,069,108, or $2.18 a share.

Federal income and excess profits taxes for last year were $772,043, compared with $372,158 in 1940, an increase of 107 per cent. Net profit, before these taxes, was $1,881,553, compared with $1,441,266 in 1940, or an increase of 30.5 per cent.

Commenting on the year's operations, President T. N. Beavers stated:

"During the year one store was opened and one closed, the number in operation at the close of the year being 136, the same as at the beginning. Four stores were moved to new locations and completely refitted and extensive alterations and remodeling were completed in five others. By reason of priorities together with the high cost of labor, it is expected this work will have to be drastically curtailed in 1942."

The balance sheet showed total assets of $9,941,278 as of December 31, 1941, with current assets of $6,421,207. Current liabilities were $2,814,583, a ratio of $2.28 to $1.

Continuing last year's record pace, net sales in the first two months this year jumped 16.9 per cent, as compared with the same period last year, Treasurer W. H. Churchill reported yesterday. The respective totals were $4,797,710, against $4,104,111 in the January-February period last year.

Sales in February alone totaled $2,343,765, a gain of $353,751, or 17.8 per cent over the corresponding month last year.

Reopening of Case Refused by Court

Newark, N. J., March 13 (AP).—Vice Chancellor Charles M. Egan declined today to reopen a 1933 decree discontinuing stockholders' suits against the American Tobacco Company.

Counsel for a minority group of stockholders had contended the settlement was a fraud on the court and themselves. They were not informed, counsel said, that Richard Reid Rogers, New York counsel who prosecuted the original suits, was to be paid $545,000 by American Tobacco after the suits were dismissed.

Egan said in his opinion he knew of no rule requiring the original complainants to serve written notice to the 40,000 stockholders of the corporation of the position of the settlement and to bear the expense thereof.

$18,000,000 Issue Placed Privately

New York, Mar. 13 (AP).—The Consolidated Oil Corporation reported it had placed privately with seven banks and three insurance companies an issue of 18 million dollars of its 1 to 15 year first preferred ship mortgage serial notes.

The notes, a direct obligation of the parent company, will be additionally secured by a first mortgage on the tank ships owned by Sinclair Refining Co., ten of which contracted for in May, 1940, are among the most modern in the marine field.

The equipment serial notes mature in equal annual installments of $1,200,000 from February 1, 1943, to February 1, 1937, inclusive, and bear varying rates of interest, the overall average interest being 2.50 per cent.

Sale of the notes was arranged through Kuhn, Loeb & Co.

Studebaker War Work To Boom Employment

South Bend, Ind., Mar. 13 (AP).—The Studebaker Corporation is now engaged almost exclusively in producing war materials and when capacity operations are achieved on present commitments total employment will be at least 2½ times greater than in 1941, Paul G. Hoffman, president, said in the annual report.

On the basis of present contracts, he said, Studebaker's major war efforts will be in the production of heavy duty military trucks and aircraft engines. Three new plants for the manufacture of aircraft engines have been completed for the Government, Hoffman said, and within a few months employment in this division alone will exceed the normal employment in Studebaker's automobile factories.

In 1941, Studebaker and subsidiaries earned $2,486,397, equal to $2.12 a common share, against $2,124,628, or 96 cents a share, in 1940.

Housewife Made Judge of Fair Retail Prices; OPA Checks Put Mainly on Wholesale Levels

The American housewife, a skilled judge of price and quality "downtown" or at the corner grocery, has been made informal policeman to guard against the sharp price increases most feared by Government economists.

Depending on the housewife's long training at bargain hunting to check price increases in retail stores, the Office of Price Administration is limiting its price freezing largely to the wholesale prices of goods.

Not all household goods, by any means, are covered by these orders. But Price Administrator Leon Henderson has thrown a ceiling over the prices which manufacturers or wholesalers may charge for such things as cigarettes, nylon hose, tea, pork products, bed linen, radios and rugs and carpets. Other items will be covered from time to time as the threat of price increase appears.

Excepting sugar, canned fruits and vegetables are the first dinner table necessity to come under a price ban. Noting that the average price which canners charged for their fruits and vegetables had increased 20 per cent since last August while retail prices had increased 10 per cent—Henderson ordered that prices charged by canners and wholesalers should not rise above their end-of-February level.

Except for some "slight increases" to cover the difference between what a grocer paid for goods now on his shelf and the price at the end of February, Henderson argued that there was no reason for retail prices of affected canned goods to rise further.

Canned fruits covered by the order include apples, apple sauce, apricots, cherries, fruit cocktail, fruit salad, peaches, pears, pineapples and plums.

Henderson placed responsibility for keeping retail prices on an even keel on the shoulders of the retailers themselves. While Henderson's scouts presumably will keep an eye on the canned goods price-tags in grocery stores, the housewife is able to judge for herself whether her grocer's future prices are in line.

Henderson made it clear that, if retailers fail to keep their canned goods prices right, the OPA will take steps to control prices in the reail stores.

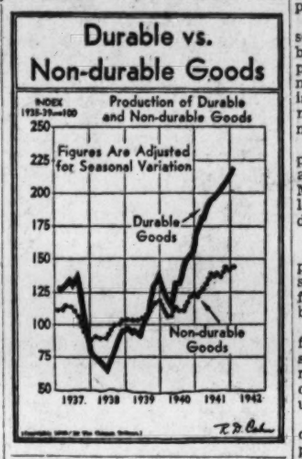
The same kind of buyer-policing which must rule the canned-goods problem was suggested by Henderson specifically for rubber goods. He urged buyers to check profiteering by watching prices and refusing to buy where prices increased excessively.

Although great quantities of canned goods are needed to feed our enlarged Army and Navy, and to feed the fighters of other United Nations, OPA officials said there still are enough canned goods to provide for "reasonable consumer needs."

One reason for the price-fixing order on canned goods, it was explained, was that increases in their prices had frightened some housewives—and some wholesalers and retailers—into stocking up unnecessarily.

Such hoarding sometims starts off the vicious scarcity cycle: The cycle which runs—buying rush—price increases—more buying rush—more price increase—sold out!

When buyers get panicky over rumors of shortages, and start a run on the stores, it is possible for them to create, temporarily, the very thing they fear—shortage. And in the process, they may run the price of goods away out of line.



Belladonna Seeded On Many U. S. Farms

New York, March 13 (AP).—W. W. Bell, of S. B. Penick & Co., botanical drug house, announced today he hoped to harvest this season from United States farms nearly 100 tons, or more than a year's supply, of belladonna, an important ingredient in many medical preparations.

The plant, commonly known as deadly nightshade, has been seeded in hundreds of acres in Wisconsin, Ohio, Tennessee, Kentucky, Pennsylvania, New York, Washington and Oregon in an attempt to make up for loss of the normal supply from the Balkan area of Europe.

U. S. Assumes Control Over Wood Pulp

By the Associated Press.

The Government yesterday took control of the Nation's entire supply of wood pulp, effective May 1, under a War Production Board order assuming power to allocate both domestically produced and imported pulp to paper mills and other users.

The order is intended "to conserve supplies and distribute equitably the available pulp between competing war and civilian requirementts," WPB said. Nitrating pulp is used for making explosives and military demand is expected to mount steeply this year.

Pulp imported from Canada, the principal foreign source of supply, after noon, Eastern War Time, on May 1, will be "frozen" until released by J. S. Knowlson, WPB's director of industry operations.

The order affects all types of pulp and all companies, and requires pulp consumers to file monthly schedules of their orders for the following month. These reports will begin next month.

Consumers also are required to file reports on consumption and supplies on hand and producers must provide monthly statements of their advanced shipping schedules.

On the basis of information thus obtained WPB will direct what pulp deliveries may be made. Producers will be required to withhold for "special distribution" a portion of their monthly production to be decided from time to time.

The order, officials of the WPB pulp and paper section said, is not expected to be applied stringently for the first several months. During that time, however, WPB will set up machinery for stringent application when the supply situation becomes acute.

It is expected that the control will be used to allocate pulp to paper mills facing shutdown because of the increasing conversion of the industry to nitrating pulp for the Army and because European supply sources have been cut off.

New York Cotton

New York, March 13 (AP).—Cotton futures moved narrowly again today under the influence of Washington uncertainties, closing 5 cents a bale higher to 10 cents lower.

Mill demand for spot cotton tapered off, although asking prices continued firm and at the highs of the season. Producers in the Southeast were holding for 20 cents or more a pound cotton stored in country warehouses.

Tool Workers' Shortage Still Is Bottleneck

By the Associated Press.

Detroit, March 13.—War implement production in the automotive industry is beginning to speed up, Ernest Kanzler, chief of the automotive branch, War Production Board, said today, but he reiterated that a shortage of tool and die workers still presented a serious problem in the industry's war effort.

"We can't eliminate the blackout on assembly lines unless we first eliminate the blackout in the tool room. Tool rooms must work full blast around the clock.

"America demands this job be done. It will not be hampered by labor or management."

Must Double Total

Kanzler recently said that 22,000 tool and die makers are employed in the Detroit area, but that twice that number would not be too many for the job ahead.

A proposal for meeting the shortage contemplates the upgrading of workmen in all classifications in the automobile factories, making tool and die workers out of men next below that highest grading among automobile plant workers and so on down the line.

This plan had been opposed by the United Automobile Workers (C.I.O.), because of wage rate differences between tool and die makers employed in job shops and those in the automobile companies' own plants. An agreement on wage stabilization was announced about three weeks ago, but other differences subsequently developed.

"We thought we had this settled several times but every time someone kicked over the traces," Kanzler said. "A representative of the labor division of the WPB is here now to give us the answer. We must have this settled right away."

Idle Tools Shifted

Citing numerous instances where machine tools temporarily idle in one plant or currently engaged in secondary work had been shifted to factories where they were vitally needed, Kanzler said:

"Getting all the interested parties together in these new and far-flung programs has proved a great aid in advancing production."

He told of one Detroit company that prior to February had made only a few center wings for bomber planes, but now is on a production basis and by mid-April will surpass schedules. This, he said, was accomplished through complete cooperation of plant officials, Army Air Corps officers and technical men of the War Production Board.

Peacetime Luxury, Union PacificHead Calls 40-HourWeek

Los Angeles, March 13 (AP).—The war, says President W. M. Jeffers of the Union Pacific Railroad, can't be won on the basis of a 40-hour week in American industry.

"I have no quarrel with the 40-hour week as such," he told a press conference today. "But it's a peacetime luxury and it should be suspended until the war is won."

Jeffers said he knew no reason why men in industry shouldn't work 60, or even 70 hours weekly.

"The working man knows the situation," he observed, "and I'm sure the mass of labor would fall in with a program to increase the working week."

The important thing, he said, is to end weekend blackouts in industrial plants.

"We must keep every machine working every available minute."

Union Pacific shop employes now work nine hours a day six days a week, sometimes seven, he declared, adding:

"And they're doing it willingly."

Dressed Pork Prices Drop; Hogs Follow

Chicago, March 13 (AP).—Hog prices dropped 15 to 25 cents today on further softness in dressed pork. Opening weak to 15 cents down, hogs soon extended their losses and closing quotations were lowest of the session.

Top price declined to $13.55, 10 cents under yesterday and 20 cents below the top recorded prior to Tuesday's announcement that a ceiling would be set upon dressed pork on March 23.

Buckner Estate Valued at $120,000

Riverhead, N. Y., March 13 (AP).—The late Mortimer N. Buckner, board chairman of the New York Trust Co., who died in New York February 25, left a personal estate of not more than $120,000, according to his will filed for probate today in the Suffolk County surrogate's court. He was a summer resident at Fishers Island.

Chicago Grain

Chicago, March 13 (AP).—After surrendering part of Thursday's advance, the wheat market rallied today to finish with little net change but other cereals registered fractional losses.

Wheat was off as much as ¾ cent at one time and rye and soybeans showed losses of a cent or more as the market absorbed profit taking and selling inspired by reports that the President may veto legislation which would interfere with the Government program for disposal of ever-normal granary supplies. Later, mill buying appeared in the wheat market and there was short covering in other pits to cushion the decline.

Wheat closed ⅛ lower to ⅛ higher compared with yesterday, May, 1.30⅛@1.30¼; July, 1.32@1.31⅞; corn, ¼@⅜ down; May, 88½; July, 90@90⅞; oats, unchanged to ⅛ off; rye, ⅝–⅞ lower; soybeans, ⅞@⅝ down, and lard unchanged at ceilings.

Legislation which Washington reports indicated the President may veto has won tentative aproval in both houses despite Presidential opposition. It would, in effect, prevent sales of Government owned wheat and corn at prices below parity in certain cases, a practice which during the past few months has limited grain prices rises, traders said.

Steel and Auto Shares Lead Faltering Rise; American Airlines Off 3¼ on Refund Order

While many leaders were unable to do much in the way of recovery, the general direction was upward after a hesitant start with steels, motors nad specialties favored. Advances, ranging from fractions to two points or so, were later reduced and there still were plenty of declines in evidence at the close.

The Associated Press average of 60 stocks was up .2 of a point at 34.5, its first plus sign since March 3. Dealers were relatively sluggish throughout and transfers of 339,390 shares compared with 435,263 Thursday.

Such improvement as seeped into the list was credited to a number of factors. Among these was a slightly better brand of war news, the persistent belief bearish tax prospects had been discounted to a considerable extent, and the President's disclosure study was being made of some form of wage controls.

Stocks finishing on the upside included United States Steel, Bethlehem, Chrysler, General Motors, Western Union, Sears Roebuck, Du Pont, United States Rubber preferred, Union Carbide, Philip Morris, Standard Oil (N. J.), Eastman Kodak, United Aircraft, Kennecott and United States Gypsum.

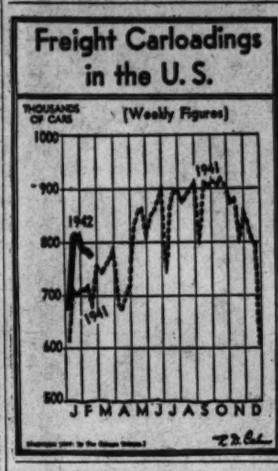
Despite the stronger tone in most departments a smattering of new 4-year lows was noted. In arrears were Allied Chemical, Westinghouse, Goodrich, Santa Fe, Southern Railway, Chesapeake & Ohio and Texas Co.

American Airlines dropped 3¼ points on selling attributed to the ruling of the Civil Aeronautics Board that the company had been overpaid several millions by the Government in excessive mail rates and stands liable for heavy refunds.

Rails were somewhat slack in the wake of the request of the Office of Price Administration that the recent freight rate boost on certain commodities be postponed. Steels reflected record capacity mill operations while motors and some blue chips rebounded on the thought these had been oversold.

Bonds generally were on the losing side. Commodities were uneven. At Chicago wheat was off ⅛ of a cent a bushel to up as much, corn down ¼ to ½ and hogs 15 to 20 cents in arrears. Cotton was up 5 cents to off 10 cents a bale.

Aluminum of America pushed up 2½ in the Curb. Lesser gainers were Creole Petroleum, Bell Aircraft, Brewster Aero and Pantepec. Volume here approximated 53,000 shares versus 69,000 yesterday.



OPA Aims Blow At Price Rise in Women's Wear

By the Associated Press

The Office of Price Administration yesterday clapped a temporary price ceiling on finished piece goods made of cotton, rayon and their mixtures to check what it called a "rapid and unwarranted rise in prices."

The 60-day order in effect freezes prices at current levels, since it provides that maximum prices should not go higher than those prevailing between March 7 and 11.

The price action does not apply to retail sales, but officials said the effect of it should be to prevent further increases in the retail price of women's and children's dresses, women's suits, coats, pajamas, house coats, men's shirts, curtains and similar items.

The OPA does not consider the frozen prices reasonable, but on the contrary, regards many of them "entirely too high," an announcement said. The temporary action was intended to stop further advances pending the issuance of a permanent regulation setting specific ceilings at lower levels.

Action was taken "because the price rise has been substantial and the rate of advance has been accelerating so rapidly as to suggest profiteering," Acting Price Administrator John E. Hamm said.

Copper Deliveries Slump in February

New York, March 13 (AP).—Deliveries of copper to domestic consumers in February totaled 107,616 tons, the Copper Institute reported today. Trade sources said the month's deliveries were the smallest since the totals of foreign and domestic shipments were combined in March, 1941. January deliveries were 130,467 tons.

Stocks of domestic refined copper at the end of February were 77,329 tons, a drop of 4042 tons from January. Stocks of blister copper were reduced 1421 tons so that combined stocks above ground on February 28 were down 5463 tons.

Power Parley Called Off

New York, March 13 (AP).—The Edison Electric Institute annual convention, scheduled for the first week of June at Atlantic City, N. J., will not be held this year, C. W. Kellogg, president, announced today. He said the decision was because of heavy war demands on electric utility companies.

Carrier Bonds Drop on OPA Rate Order

By the Associated Press

New York, March 13.—Rails, the center of attention today, slumped on the bond market after the Office of Price Administration requested the Nation's railroads to suspend approved freight-rate increases on ten large groups of commodities.

Losses for the day ranged from fractions to about a point.

The big activity in the rails was illustrated by Missouri Pacific "F" 5s of '77, and "I" 5s of '81, which respectively had sales of $219,000 and $237,000, par value, and New Haven 4½s, whose sales totaled $221,000 par value. All were lower.

Other losers included Great Northern 4s, Lehigh Valley 4s, Baltimore & Ohio stamped convertibles, New York Central 5s, Armour of Delaware 4s, Consolidated Edison 3½s, Erie 4½s, International Hydro Electric 6s and International Paper 5s.

Sales for the day totaled $10,010,850, par value, as compared with $8,536,600 yesterday and $10,422,400 the day before.

United States Government moved indifferently on the stock exchange and over the counter with closing quotations within fractions to a little better than a point either way.

25% Boost in Fees Effective Monday

New York, March 13 (AP).—A new schedule of commission rates approximately 25 per cent higher than those now in effect will become applicable on all transactions in stocks and bonds on the New York Stock Exchange next Monday.

The new tariffs were approved by the membership by a vote of about 4 to 1. The proposal was advanced by the board of governors in an effort to offset the severe drop in revenues accompanying the extremely low volume of sales in the past few years.

Court to Hear Arguments in Fidelity Case

Richmond, Va., March 13 (AP).—The right of the $25,000,000 Fidelity Assurance Association of Wheeling, W. Va., to seek reorganization in the Southern West Virginia District Federal Court will be argued before the Fourth U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals on April 20.

The court today fixed the date for hearing an appeal brought by officials and creditors of six States from a decision in which Federal Judge Ben Moore, of Charleston, W. Va., granted the company's petition and ruled that his court had jurisdiction.

Joining in the appeal were interested parties from Tennessee, Iowa, Missouri, Wisconsin, Maryland and West Virginia, most of them banking and insurance commissioners who had juris

This is merely to remark that when a gentleman, name of Albert N. Dennis, takes to the air over WJSV at 6:30 tonight, the process will be distinctly no novelty to the said Mr. Dennis.

For it will be the 400th consecutive presentation of his "Labor News Review," which, in other words, means that he's been on the air with his weekly review of labor, industry and economic conditions ever since 1934.

This leads to some rather broad statements which can be made without fear of successful contradiction. One is that, without doubt, "The Labor News Review" is the oldest program of its type in the world. Another is that it has boasted more prominent guests from the fields of labor and Government than any other program of its nature that can be thought of offhand.

The Secretary of Labor has been on repeatedly as a guest as have the Federal Works Administrator, the Wage-Hour Administrator, the heads of the national labor organizations—all to amount to something like 300 nationally known guests that Mr. Dennis has had on with him to inform labor circles of what's going on in those 400 broadcasts.

As a matter of fact, though, there was one exception to Mr. Dennis' record of continuity, which makes the story more human. That was a couple of years ago when his doctors wouldn't allow him to leave his sickbed for the show. So he wrote it there and had his daughter read it for him on the air. So, nonethe-less, you see it's still a consecutive Dennis production.

Contract Bridge

One of the things we will have to do without, along with sugar and tire rationing, is the fun of solving the Bridge Olympic hands. The Olympic, which before the war had entries from all over the world, will not be held in 1942, as already has been announced, and we have but a few hands from last year's contest left to explore. One of these is presented today. Declarer, West, is to make three no trump against a spade opening from North. The official solution follows:

Today's Hand

SOUTH DEALER

NORTH: ♠ Q J 8 7 3 ♡ A 10 8 ◇ 6 3 ♣ J 8 6
WEST: ♠ A K 5 ♡ K 6 3 ◇ J 9 4 ♣ K 10 5 3
EAST: ♠ 9 6 ♡ Q 7 4 ◇ A Q 10 7 5 ♣ A 7 4
SOUTH: ♠ 10 4 2 ♡ J 9 5 2 ◇ K 8 2 ♣ Q 9 2

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
Pass	1 ♣	Pass	1 ◇
Pass	1 NT	Pass	3 NT
Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: 7 ♠.

The only difficulty for declarer arises when a spade is opened. He can count nine tricks at least, but before all of them are developed he may have to lose the lead in diamonds and in hearts. If North has five spades, it is imperative to keep him from establishing and running the suit.

If the diamond finesse is a winner, nine tricks can be cashed without loss of the lead. But if it loses, a heart trick probably will have to be set up. Now the diamond finesse is toward the nondanger hand, since South will be exhausted of spades after three leads if North has five of the suit. But the heart ace, if held by North, is a dangerous reentry.

This analysis indicates that, for the sake of the possibility that the diamond king is held by South, the heart trick must be developed at once. On winning the first or second spade lead, West must lead a low heart. Should the ace take this lead and spades be continued he must hold off until the third round and then take the diamond finesse. By this line of play declarer takes 10 tricks.

At worst, the queen of hearts is allowed to win. West gains entry with the club king to lead diamonds. South is in with the king and returns hearts. But with the ace located in the North hand, declarer muts perceive the wisdom of holding up the king of hearts. The defense can then win only two heart tricks. At the outset it could be foreseen that the risk of leading hearts was somewhat less than that of taking no measures of protection against the spade suit. Declarer makes game, giving up two hearts, a spade and a club.

YEAH... BUT IF WE COULD MAKE THEM THINK WE WERE THEIR OWN MEN IN THE TANK... MOVING THE PRISONERS TO ANOTHER PLACE DOWN THE RIVER...
...THIS IS MY FIRST CRACK AT THIS LOW ALTITUDE STUFF... ISN'T THERE DANGER OF ENEMY SPOTTERS TIPPING OFF OUR APPROACH?
